State Board Announces New November Election Procedures

by Edith J. Beauchamp

Dramatic changes in how Maryland will vote in the November general election for President and Congress were made official just last week. The Maryland State Board of Elections met Wednesday, August 12 in an emergency session and ratified new dates for the general election and a new strategy for voting, using the emergency powers

Governor Larry Hogan gave them to conduct the election.

Hogan wrote: "I have issued a proclamation granting the State Board of Elections the authority it is seeking to create voting centers for use during early voting and on Election Day, at the sole discretion of the Board. My only direction to you, under existing law, was to expand and encourage voting by mail by immediately mailing absentee ballot requests to every voter."

The significant change from the June primary, when all registered voters were mailed ballots, is that now, for the general election, all Marylanders must specifically make a formal request on a signed application form to receive a mail-in ballot.

Because the State Board anticipates that most people will still opt for mail-in voting, the Board will mail ballot request forms to all registered voters with a postage pre-paid return

This summer the Greenbelt Recreation Kinder Camp Connect program has looked drastically different from the Kinder Camp programs of the past. For instance, this summer the preschool aged campers have worked entirely from the safety of their own homes. With COVID-19 closing down the Community Center, staff quickly shifted their focus from in-person camps to virtual camps. Kinder Camp staff members Taylor Hardy, Teresa Trozzo, Nadia Constanza and Shantel Morton immediately

Council Briefed on Beltway Widening Options, Impacts

by Diane Oberg

Additional details are now available about the impact of the proposed widening of the Capital Beltway (I-495) and I-270. The Federal Highway Administration (FHWA) and the Maryland Department of Transportation State Highway Administration (SHA) have released their Draft Environmental Impact Study (DEIS) and the Joint Federal/State Application (JPA) for the alteration of any floodplains or wetlands, and have begun virtual and in-person public hearings on the documents (details at the end of this article).

Comments may be submitted through Thursday, October 8 but those wishing to comment should not wait until the last minute. The executive summary of these reports is 21 pages. The DEIS is 353 pages and the JPA is even longer.

At its August 10 regular meeting the Greenbelt City Council was briefed on the DEIS by Molly Porter of the city's Department of Planning and Community Development, who recently achieved Certified City Planner status. Staff will continue to review the document and will prepare comments to council for approval.

DEIS

The DEIS identifies seven alternatives including no build. The six build alternatives include various mixtures of express toll lanes, managed lanes and high-occupancy vehicle lanes.

Porter noted that the earlier transit alternatives are off the table. Instead, the plan now is to allow buses free use of the managed lanes and accommodation of direct and indirect connections to transit stations.

Porter noted that the city has consistently advocated against widening the Capital Beltway due to the significant impact the project would have on "natural, socioeconomic, cultural and built environments." Instead, the city has urged the state to study alternative congestion relief packages including increased funding for transit and other alternative

Greenbelt Station and Council Work to Resolve Trail, Issues

by Matthew Arbach

Residents of Greenbelt Station (GS) were welcomed to a Greenbelt City Council worksession on August 12 to share their recent concerns and challenges. GS representatives included Community Manager Leslie Perez of Community Association Management Professionals (CAMP) and GS Master Association Vice President Rachel Roberts-Jones, along with residents Ting Ma and Brian Drewry.

City Director of Planning and Community Development Terri Hruby began with a rundown of the latest developments on the trail that will connect GS and the Greenbelt Metro station, a key element of the community when it was conceived. This trail, active in its planning and permitting phase, will be constructed by Woodlawn, the developer of

City Needs Better Maglev Strategy

The article by Donna Hoffmeister in the Thursday August 13 issue of the News Review described a half-hour City Council discussion of maglev as “Paralysis by Analysis.” The discussion focused on possible lawsuits, an understandable reflection of anger over revised Baltimore-Washington Rapid Rail (BWRR) maglev routes that bullseye the Greenbelt Forest Preserve for destruction. (See maps in August 6 issue.)

As the article explained, BWRR also quietly excluded the Greenbelt city government from a meeting, in which the new route proposal was explained, along with plans for maglev to pop out of the ground in the middle of the Preserve and then run over some of the most ecologically sensitive portions of the Preserve’s North Woods section. The city found out about the secret BWRR meeting by sheer luck.*

An unanswered question is: What will Greenbelt do next? Residents of the city still await an answer.

Ms. Hoffmeister, who chairs Greenbelt’s Forest Preserve Advisory Board, first reported on the July 20 meeting in the News Review a week earlier (August 6 issue) with an article saying that City Planner Terri Hruby will attempt to have BWRR repeat its presentation at a council worksession.

Has the city contacted BWRR? If so, what was BWRR’s response? The question should be asked not only of Hruby, but also the entire council, the city manager and the city attorney. At the very least, the city should demand a briefing by BWRR and keep the public informed.

Paralysis by Analysis depicts council arguing over how best to sue BWRR. Let’s file a lawsuit?

The city can’t afford a lawsuit? Let’s find an advocacy group to represent Greenbelt (for free). The circular discussion went nowhere.

The city would be better served with a chess-like approach that places a premium on strategy as opposed to emotion. The city needs a public relations strategy, not arguments over how to sue BWRR. It’s far too early to talk about lawsuits, even though court challenges to maglev are likely at some point.

I urge council and city employees to help the News Review, civic organizations, other affected cities and other news outlets expand the public record about maglev.

For example, it might be helpful to contact the Maryland Department of Natural Resources (DNR), to flesh out details of a study of the Forest Preserve several years ago. DNR scientists identified at least one endangered species in the Preserve. Exposing a threat to an endangered species is one way to checkmate BWRR. This is but one suggestion.

Could the city designate a member of staff to deal with maglev issues, if only to keep the project’s threat to our city in the public eye?

Given all the obstacles that BWRR faces, an effective PR approach would well provide enough ammunition to kill the project, possibly before anti-maglev lawsuits ever hit the courts.

Willis Witter

* (Editor’s Note: This letter was written prior to knowing that BWRR did not organize the meeting. See Clarifications, this page.)

Clarifications

DeWayne Washington, news chief at Goddard Space Flight Center, referring to our article, Maglev Snubs Local Officials: Changes Threaten Forest, in the August 6 issue, wishes to clarify that “Goddard Space Flight Center (GSFC) has not offered a position on the maglev project. GSFC is concerned about impacts to operations at the Goddard Geophysical and Astronomical Observatory (GGAO) from the potential location of a Trainset Maintenance Facility near GGAO, particularly the one on the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center property at the old airstrip off Springfield Road. These concerns have been expressed as part of the on-going Environmental Impact Statement process.”

Editor’s Note

With respect to the same story, we wrote that Baltimore Washington Rapid Rail (BWRR) hosted the meetings on June 23 and July 20. The lead agencies for the June 23 meeting with a Draft Environmental Impact Statement (DEIS) update were the Federal Railroad Administration, Maryland Department of Transportation and the Maryland Transit Administration. The lead agencies for the July 20 meeting updating the historic preservation materials were the Federal Railroad Administration and the Maryland Department of Transportation.

Also, according to BWRR, funding for the project will come from a mix of sources, including Japan, U.S. government loan and grant programs, and the private sector.

Venkata Kowtha, 93, of 8009 Craddock Road died peacefully on August 16, 2020. He was the eldest of 11 children and has four siblings in the area and 12 grand- and great-grandchildren. He lived in Greenbelt from 1995 until his death and was active at the Siva Vishnu Temple. He was a fixture at Schrom Hills Park with his wife Janaki, with whom he shared more than 70 years of marriage.

Eunice Barber

Eunice Elizabeth Schick Barber died on August 2, 2020. She was born on November 25, 1928, in Scranton, Pa., one of six children born to Carl and Mary Schick.

As a young girl she lived in a house across the street from a young man named Donald Thomas Barber, whom she admired. She confessed to her children in later years their meeting was love at first sight. That love culminated in their union as husband and wife in 1951. Their love and their life brought them to Greenbelt in 1953. In the coming years they raised their five daughters in a small two-bedroom GHI house.

Throughout her life Eunice was a devout Catholic, volunteering much of her time to St. Hugh's Church, St. Hugh's School and the Ladies of Charity. Along with church her family was her world. Her many recipes are still treasured in the family and in early years were very generously shared with neighbors and friends. Although all admit we can follow the recipe and it still will not taste like hers. As a talented seamstress she was known to easily create any garment you could dream up: wedding gowns (which included her own), bridesmaids and prom dresses, costumes and much more.

She was the wife of the late Donald Barber; mother of Lois (Marcus) Ladny, Beth (Harry) Fendlay, Connie Barber, the late Mary Donna Mangum and Nancy Ann Barber; mother-in-law of Tick Mangum; sister of Carl Schick; grandmother of Greg (Kristine) Mangum, Andrea (Scott) Ziemba, Shannon (Ken) Hyland, Sarah Fendlay, Tony Fendlay, Jimmy Barber, Jack Barber, Tiffany Axtell, the late Adam Ladny and Danny Barber; also survived by many great-grandchildren, nieces and nephews. She will be dearly missed by her family and many friends. Those wishing to honor her may give to the Maryland Province of Jesuits Fund and/or CALMRA, Inc. In her granddaughter Andi's words, "Heaven is now an even better place because we know she is there. Until we hug again - Rest in Peace."

Valved Masks Are a Bad Idea, Less Effective Against COVID

by Cathie Meetre

Fabric masks like those made by the Greenbelt Mask Makers do not offer the same protection as N 95 masks but they do offer some protection. According to the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), the protection from these masks is provided less to the wearer and more to those around the wearer, because the mask protects from the virus escaping better than from virus getting in.

Some masks, often referred to as Exhale masks, have a ventilation valve (VV) or vent. The valve opens when breathing OUT and closes when breathing IN and this makes it easier for the person to exhale with the mask on. Incoming air is filtered but outgoing air - containing the virus if the wearer has it - is NOT filtered but goes straight out of the valve. This means everybody around the wearer is exposed to the virus just as if the person wasn't wearing a mask at all. The VV mask gives the user their own smaller part of the protection but provides zero protection to others. Many people with COVID-19 either have no symptoms or haven't yet exhibited them - so a person can be infected without knowing it.

The diagram shows the effect if two people with masks are in a room and none (A), one (B) or both (C) use the VV mask. In the diagram, 1 is the total protection offered by a mask (for the example, the 1 unit of protection is divided into 1/3 for the wearer and 2/3 for those around the wearer). If one person wears a VV mask and the other a cloth mask, the VV wearer has the same protection as before - but the other person is less protected. If both have VV masks, neither is well protected because they can contaminate each other. The VV mask wearer is only in the cat-bird seat if everybody else wears a cloth mask. As soon as someone else wears a VV mask, they are both worse off.

GRAPHIC BY CATHIE MEETRE

Exhale masks provide much less overall protection than regular masks.

The CDC recommends against valved or vented masks. For more information, see cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/prevent-getting-sick/about-face-coverings.html.

Greenbelters Launch a Satellite That Sees Clouds from All Sides

by Amy S. Hansen

What happens to the clouds when fires put more smoke in the air? Or when winds send African soil into the atmosphere? Greenbelters Vanderlei Martins and Roberto Fernandez-Borda helped design a satellite to find out.

Working out of the University of Maryland, Baltimore County, with funding from NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center, physicist Martins, who is the project's principal investigator, and lead payload physicist/engineer Fernandez-Borda created HARP, the Hyper-Angular Rainbow Polarimeter Cubesat. Greenbelter Brent McBride also worked on the project while an undergraduate and continued through graduate work.

The small but mighty satellite was launched November 2, 2019 from Wallops Island, Va., and headed for the International Space Station. After being set in orbit, HARP had first light – its instruments were turned on - on April 16, 2020. The team had data and a preliminary presentation by June 23. And then, even with that tight a time table, they won the Small Satellite Mission of the Year on August 6, an award given out by the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics.

The satellite is about the size of a store-bought loaf of bread, with a payload taking up only half of its volume. HARP is a proof-of-technology satellite, Martins said. It is designed more to show the work that can be done, rather than to collect lots of data, and the team is already building HARP2 to collect global data. However, Martins is excited by the data that HARP is collecting, proving that the technology works just fine and that the information can help in the fight against global climate change.

Specifically, HARP looks at the clouds using essentially polarized sunglasses. Just as sunglasses help a person look past the sun's glare, HARP's polarized filters and prism divide and rotate the light so that researchers can take out the glare and make observations from several angles. "Every time HARP flies over a region, we see that region from multiple perspectives," said Martins.

HARP's conglomerate of pictures means scientists can peer inside and around the clouds. Will they see dust? Wildfire smoke? Plain rain droplets? "We can tell a lot of information about the type of aerosols or particles around the clouds," Martins said, "including size and shape and distribution patterns."

Understanding aerosols is critical to understanding global climate. Aerosols may reflect light away from Earth or conversely trap energy inside Earth's atmosphere. Aerosols also affect global precipitation. For example, wildfire smoke may enter clouds and cause a feedback loop that causes less precipitation and therefore drier areas and more wildfires. Other aerosol effects may produce more precipitation.

Almost immediately after starting its orbit, HARP took an intimate look at a Sahara dust storm and how the dust entered the atmosphere and then fell to Earth in the Americas. Martins said these kinds of storms happen frequently, but they were glad to capture the phenomenon with HARP.

HARP's mission is expected to last 12 to 15 months, said Martins, but he is hopeful that this small satellite is the first of many using this technology.

Crush Funk Pop-up Concert Serenades Charlestowne Village

Crush Funk plays pop-up concert for residents of Charlestowne Village.

We're living in a time when surprises are welcomed and kindness is needed. And Crush Funk provided just that for the residents of Charlestowne Village with a free pop-up concert Monday evening, August 17. Four members of the Washington, D.C.-based ensemble serenaded residents who gathered on their lawns, danced in the street and watched from balconies to enjoy the eclectic combination of jazz, go-go and funk music.

Since the beginning of the area's quarantine, Crush Funk has performed over 80 similar concerts from Alexandria to Baltimore. The band consists of graduates from local historically Black colleges and universities including Howard University, the University of the District of Columbia and Bowie State University. Infusing the evening with sounds of go-go – the musical genre born and bred in our nation's capital – and clad in shirts hailing the District, the hour-long treat had a distinct local flavor. The evening's ensemble included a trombone, trumpet, sousaphone and drums with occasional call-and-response interaction with the audience. Renditions of Ain't No Sunshine and When the Saints Go Marching In especially pleased those gathered, though distanced, for a respite from isolation – unified by the self-giving gift of community. After the final number, the band members mingled with their audience in a moment reminding us of what we've missed most in the last five months.

But Soft, What Light Through Yonder Zoom Screen Breaks?

by Melissa Sites

To be an artist is to think outside the box – the box in this case being the ubiquitous Zoom screen. The Rude Mechanicals, resident at Greenbelt Arts Center (GAC), offered two live Zoom performances of Shakespeare’s Romeo and Juliet over the weekend, directed by Claudia Bach.

The show was initially planned as a full production at GAC, but after only two weeks of rehearsal, such gatherings were banned because of quarantine. For many months, the group had hopes that a live performance might be possible, but ultimately, the choice was made to use Zoom.

Each actor is performing from a separate space, and isolation became a theme of the production. Audra Jacobs, as Romeo, appears to be a teenager at home in her room. Her emotional decisions play out against the backdrop of a poster with a night scene of a city, and a large planning white board. Although the backdrops were not designed, Jacobs gave a dreamy interpretation of Romeo’s character, and the way her plans (and those of others in the play) crumble to nothing is highlighted by the background of her room.

In the talkback after the Sunday production, several of the actors spoke about the choice to re-gender Romeo as female, and to present a posse of young women in Romeo, Mercutio, Benvolio, Juliet, her Nurse and the antagonistic Tybalt. Sarah Pfanz gave an energetic and engaging performance as Mercutio, a brilliant person whose potential is wasted by the petty feuds of the families of Verona. Another standout performer was Wes Dennis, playing the combined role of Prince of Verona and Count Paris, whose professional appearance and office backdrop lent credence to his gentility, sincerity and soft-spoken disgust with the warring factions and the havoc they wreak on Verona.

Even with a play as well known as Romeo and Juliet, every production has an opportunity to unveil new understandings of the characters and the dynamics of their interactions. This time, the problems of Juliet’s parents stood out. Lady Capulet (played by Tiffany Waters) tells Juliet not to mind being married so young, for she herself was married at Juliet’s age. Waters plays the woman with a cold and forbidding air.

When Old Capulet (Joshua Engel) rages against Juliet’s desire not to marry Paris, the dynamic of isolation between the two parents comes into focus. The type of political marriage that Old Capulet envisions between his daughter and his friend is the same type of marriage that united him and his wife. Lady Capulet cannot admit that Juliet’s union with the Prince might be a bad idea at such a young age, because the exact same thing happened to her. Old Capulet is enraged by Juliet’s refusal, because in this production he has a wife and a daughter, but no love binds them together. He clearly holds the Prince in much higher esteem than he does his daughter, just as Lady Capulet seems to thirst for vengeance as she grieves Tybalt’s death much more than she sympathizes with Juliet.

Tyler Haggard as Friar Laurence and Justin Bigelow as the hapless Friar John, drive the final nails in the play’s twin coffins. Because Friar John is quarantined, Friar Laurence’s vital mis- sive never reaches Romeo, and the two young lovers each kill themselves. Haggard brings a quiet intensity to his part, which Bigelow balances with tragic nonchalance.

The Rude Mechanicals brought passion and creative energy to their Zoom production, which can now be found on YouTube. Donations to GAC and The Rude Mechanicals are welcome at their websites. This reviewer encourages all to seek out online artistic productions until theater lovers can once again gather safely in person.

The Greenbelt Forest Preserve: How to Manage the Trails?

by Bryan Bruns

The Greenbelt Forest Preserve is many things to many people: a retreat to escape into nature; spooky Halloween excitement on the Pumpkin Walk; a place to walk the dog; a mysterious world in which to wander and maybe get a little lost; childhood memories of friends playing in the woods; home to birds, deer, fox, fish, fungi and many more fauna and flora in a rich, recovering ecosystem; trees surrounding a path for running; lush summer green, glorious autumn display, frozen winter snowscape and bursting blooms in spring. All these and more are part of what makes the Forest Preserve a local treasure to be protected and sustained.

A surrounding forest was part of the original idea for a belt of green around the town built in the 1930s. Most of that land has since been lost to highways, homes and other development. However, some parcels of land were regained, after prolonged effort, and turned into the Greenbelt Forest Preserve, including the North Woods and Hamilton Woods located between Greenbelt Homes Inc. and the Baltimore-Washington Parkway, and smaller tracts: Boxwood, Belle Pointe and the Sunrise Tract in Greenbelt East.

These tracts include numerous trails, but until now these trails have not been maintained by the city. In 2019, the Greenbelt City Council approved new Stewardship Guidelines for the Forest Preserve, which direct preparation of a Master Trails Plan about how trails in the Preserve will be cared for. As part of preparing the trails plan, the Forest Preserve Advisory Board (FPAB) is seeking comments from the public about the importance of the trails and how to care for them in ways that respect and enhance the natural character and goals of the Preserve.

The priority at this point is to learn more about what citizens of Greenbelt want and aspire to, in terms of principles and practices for trails in the Preserve. While there is much experience and many examples to draw on, the goal is trail stewardship that suits the special conditions and goals of each tract of the Preserve. The topics identified in the Stewardship Guidelines can, in part, be framed as a series of questions:

- How do we keep the Preserve wild while having trails that allow access?
- To what degree should the trails be maintained? For example, what should be done when a tree falls across the trail, brush grows into the trail, runoff erodes a trail to form a gully, a stream is undermining the bank beneath a trail, or similar phenomena occur?

One well-trodden trail leads through a stand of tall trees.

A Chicken of the Woods mushroom grows on a fallen log.

With no current city plan for trail maintenance, problem areas, like this muddy spot, are fixed, or not, by random users of the Preserve.

- Photos by Bryan Bruns

- What, if anything, should be done about stream crossings and muddy spots in trails?
- What areas should be protected and thus avoided by trails?
- Are there trails that should be closed? Rerouted?
- Are there places where new trails should be created, for example in the Sunrise Tract next to the Dog Park or to complete a loop in the Belle Pointe Tract?
- In planning for trail stewardship, what else needs attention and should be considered, beyond the questions and the topics identified in the Stewardship Guidelines?

The FPAB will hold an online scoping meeting at 10 a.m. on Saturday, September 12. modes of transportation.

All of the study alternatives, save no build, call for a dynamic tolling approach where tolls would be adjusted based upon traffic conditions to ensure that speeds on the managed lanes remain at or above 45 miles per hour and that maximum volumes are not exceeded in those lanes. While the toll rates have not yet been set, the DEIS estimates that tolls would range between $0.68 and $0.77 per mile.

Porter noted some changes that have occurred since the project was initially proposed. The project is envisioned as a public-private partnership, where private entities would build and operate the new lanes. Although initial claims about the project were that the private sector would fund the full cost at no expense to taxpayers, that is no longer true.

The Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission (WSSC) now estimates that it would cost $1.3 to $2 billion to move infrastructure affected by the roadwork. This cost would be borne by ratepayers.

The DEIS also indicates that a state subsidy of $482 million to $1.08 billion would be needed, most likely to be paid at the beginning of the project.

The agencies responsible for the Managed Lanes study are the FHWA and the SHA.

Wetlands

The JPA pertains to the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA), which prohibits use of "publicly owned lands of a public park, recreation area or wildlife and waterfowl refuge of national, state or local significance or land of an historic site of national, state or local significance unless there is no feasible and prudent avoidance alternative."

Within the study corridor, Porter reports, are 111 such properties. Five are located in Greenbelt: the Greenbelt Historic District, Buddy Attick Park, Indian Springs Park, McDonald Field and Greenbelt Park.

The FHWA intends to apply de minimis impact for all but Greenbelt Park saying that the impact on those properties from the project consist of minor impacts along the edge of the properties in question. The study notes that there will be coordination with the city on the evaluation review of city properties.

Environment

Porter notes the city's concern, oft repeated, that the planners are ignoring the impact of the project on greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions and air pollution. The DEIS claims that the build alternatives will result in only a "slight increase in GHG emissions" based upon the projection that by 2040 vehicles will be more energy efficient and that the extra lanes will reduce congestion and increase speeds.

Porter notes strong concerns about the impacts on wetlands and waterways in the area during construction. The DEIS finds that 16.1 to 16.5 acres of wetlands and up to 156,984 linear feet of streams could be affected. It would also affect up to 1,515 acres of forest canopy.

While the National Park Service raised the idea of having no direct access to the Baltimore-Washington Parkway, the planners determined that direct access was needed to meet the project's goals. The ramp from eastbound Greenbelt Road to the southbound Parkway will be realigned. It is estimated that 69.3 acres of the Parkway will be impacted.

Public Hearings

The virtual hearings will be held on Thursday, August 20; Tuesday, August 25; and Thursday, September 3. There will be three sessions each day at 9 a.m. to noon, 1 to 4 p.m. and 5 to 8 p.m. Two in-person meetings are planned for Tuesday, September 1 from noon to 9 p.m. in Largo and Thursday, September 10 in Rockville. Advance registration is required for the in-person meetings by calling 833-858-5960. The official U.S. Army Corps of Engineers hearing will be part of the August 25 hearings. The draft reports as well as details about the meetings and future updates are available online at 495-270-P3.com/deis.

Porter's report on the DEIS is available on the city's website as part of the agenda packet for the August 10 meeting (see greenbeltmd.gov/government/city-council/minutes-and-agendas).

GS, and once completed will fall primarily into the city's hands to maintain, with help from the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority (WMATA) in its video monitoring system. This multi-agency project is a partnership with the city, county, WMATA, Pepco and Maryland Department of the Environment. A mandatory stormwater management review has been completed, as well as an agreement with WMATA to build on their property. WMATA is active with Pepco in the design of the trail's electrical system. In spite of a two-month delay due to COVID-19, the project is moving forward, with construction expected to start in spring to early summer 2021 and last 18 months. So far, $250,000 has been spent on engineering, and the construction cost is set at $2.4 million. The city has set aside $1.8 million for the project with plans for acquiring further money through grants as things proceed. Woodlawn will contribute to construction costs as well.

Ma was concerned about the impact the trail would have on an already stressed parking situation, as more people would conceivably park in the community in order to use the trail. Hruby was a bit skeptical that this would become an issue, as the trail's three-quarter-mile span would make it an unlikely option for Metro users. Drewry pointed out that GS does have a resident parking permit system, which limits parking on neighborhood streets. Ma also reported a problem with double-parking by delivery and other trucks, posing a traffic risk.

Parking availability was a ma-major topic of the meeting. Planning staff presented their two most favored solutions: making North and South Center Drives into one-way streets and striped-end-line parking lanes rather than striped individual spaces on Greenbelt Station Parkway to maximize parking. The potential of transforming green space into parking, while favored by some GS residents, was deemed unattractive by staff as it would require an overhaul of the development's site plan and impinge negatively on the community as a whole. Mayor Colin Byrd said that, while he respects staff's counsel on this, he would be willing to explore this more if resident interest was high enough. Councilmember Judith Davis felt that this option should be the ultimate last resort.

Davis stressed that many GS units have parking garages and personal parking areas and that they should be used for such, instead of for storage.

Byrd encouraged the GS community to come to a consensus on parking solutions in order to aid in the final decision. GS resident Eric Kruszewski has been instrumental in this effort and was eager for staff advice that would "streamline the process." Planning staff is in the process of responding to some parking alternative suggestions from GS to be released in a couple weeks.

Dangerous speeding on Greenbelt Station Parkway (GSP) was brought up by Drewry. The possibility of installing speed humps was debated and was decided to be a helpful, if not perfect solution. Council pointed out that speed humps can be problematic in that they can stymie the effective transit of emergency vehicles. Hruby and Greenbelt Police Chief Richard Bowers said that they would look into implementing covert speed sensors that would provide a clear analysis of the situation, including the times of day of the most violations and the rates of speed.

Recreation Director Greg Varda gave an update on the city's recreation efforts during the health emergency. Several of the efforts to introduce more recreation opportunities to GS, like an exercise facility, are on hold due to the pandemic, but will be revisited.

The new sod and trees at Central Park and its new extension at GS is surviving despite being challenged by extreme heat in July. The lack of shade is an obstacle to the park being used actively.

Bowers stated that there was "no large increase in crime" at GS, with the trend being centered on auto and construction-site theft. Resident use of the Neighbors App by Ring has been "helpful in some cases" with video and information sharing, said Bowers.

Davis reminded the GS residents that their children are now enrolled in Greenbelt schools, "one good victory." Information on busing will be available before in-person attendance resumes.

Councilmember Edward Putens declared "welcome aboard!" to GS residents, as they are "starting to take care of your own city." He looked to a growing partnership of the city and GS as they "do all things together" and determine each of their responsibilities, such as with the WMATA trail.

My Perspective

Council Must Swim Together To Successfully Fight Maglev

by Greg Simmons

When it comes to the BW SC-Maglev Project, someone needs to tell the Greenbelt City Council to “Swim down!”

When it comes to describing the city’s efforts to deal with the multibillion-dollar maglev project aimed directly at our community, the scene in Finding Nemo where the plucky clownfish with a lucky fin guides a group of fish out of peril with a simple, unifying instruction comes to mind.

Because even with all seven members of the council at one point or another saying they don’t like the maglev project, watching the August 10 regular meeting about what should be done next reminded me of a bunch of scared fish in a net.

The last significant maglev action brought to vote was council’s November 25, 2019 decision to issue a request for qualifications (RFQ) to begin the process of hiring an outside attorney to review the project Draft Environmental Impact Statement (DEIS), which will provide a major opportunity for comment in the federal review process established for the project. At the time, the DEIS was expected as early as December 2019.

Since then, the project went on an unofficial pause, but is again readying for approval. Documents posted for last week’s city meeting show the DEIS is expected maybe as early as March 2021. While that may sound like a lot of time, that may only be just enough time for council to: 1) coalesce around action; 2) identify what funds are needed to do it; and 3) if contract hires are needed, issue bids, review and act upon them.

To be fair, it’s not that the city government is doing nothing. Despite COVID-19 wrecking everything, including the budget, city staff have been trying to keep tabs on the project, and councilmembers and the city attorney’s office have all been looking to find legal help, whether it is pro bono (i.e., free) or otherwise. City documents indicate maglev opposition is a top priority. Councilmembers are trying to take the pulse of the community. Mayor Colin Byrd said last week he wants to hold a meeting with Representative Steny Hoyer on the topic.

But despite the city’s efforts, the RFQ issued last winter has not produced an outside attorney. At last week’s full meeting, Councilmember Judith Davis asked for a worksession to be scheduled this week, but nothing happened.

So for those in this city who believe maglev will hurt Greenbelt, and who believe softer statements opposing the project won’t get the job done, the question is this: What should the council do? And then, the tougher part, how?

The first thing council needs to do is make a decision – as a group.

My proposition for them is this: put the idea of hiring an attorney on hold. More importantly, the city needs to have in place a firm to provide technical, professional, environmental and geotechnical engineering review of the DEIS. If council truly feels it cannot move forward without additional outside legal counsel, then it should budget for both outside counsel and technical expertise – but scoped only to responding to the DEIS to keep costs as low as possible.

Law firms just aren’t built to have both kinds of work under the same roof. And the rare attorney with professional heft to tackle both the maglev DEIS with its engineering or environmental issues and whatever else the city might add to the legal scope, will charge accordingly.

In response to an email I sent, City Manager Nicole Ard reminded me that “the budget is a plan” and can be adjusted “to address any significant changes,” whether it’s the maglev, the pandemic, or other unexpected costs and crises facing the city. Given the long-term potential impact on Greenbelt by the maglev project, and the basic cost savings of making a relatively small effort now rather than a significantly more expensive legal fight down the road – on what will almost certainly be significantly less favorable grounds – council should be setting aside funds now for March.

Also, don’t be shy: ask Prince George’s County Public Schools if they’d like to chip in. Eleanor Roosevelt High School and several other public schools are also in the project path. If PGCPSS says no, let Greenbelt citizens know why, please.

But whatever council does, for them to do their jobs to serve the residents of Greenbelt, they have to put something up for vote, and soon. Come on guys – you’re all on the same side. Swim down.

envelope beginning the last week in August. This will not be the ballot itself, but rather a form to request the ballot be sent to the voter’s current address, in a two-step process.

Most election officials expect most people to return the request form for a mail-in ballot.

For those who would rather vote in person and do not send back the mail-in request form, the next big change for in-person voting is that early voting will now begin on Monday, October 26, and be conducted at voting centers within each county; anyone registered in that county may go to any voting center in the county to vote.

There will be nine continuous days of in-person voting beginning on Monday, October 26 through Tuesday, November 3 from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. There will be no gap between early voting days and election day, Tuesday, November 3.

Normally the state opens close to 2,000 separate precincts for a general election. Currently the estimate of voting centers statewide is expected to be about one-tenth of that number, or 200 for the minimum number of early voting center locations, but they will be open for the nine days. The plan is that this will spread out the possible lines and require far fewer staff and locations to operate, and that people will not wait until the last day. The State Board anticipates that most people will opt to vote by mail, so that the in-person voting is mainly for newly registered voters or those whose requested ballot has not arrived by mail.

The specific locations are now being finalized and will be publicized for each county in the next few weeks. Prince George’s County should have a minimum of 11 early voting centers, although a county official confirmed this week that they are still working on possibly 20 to 29 additional centers for election day. Greenbelters could use any of the voting centers within the county. The State Board specifically asked that all public high schools be used, if possible, in addition to the other early voting centers each county has used in the most recent years on election day, if possible. Each county is to report back over the next week or so to the State Board to finalize voting center locations.

LAWN & ORDER FAQ #4, "Why does Lawn & Order run such strange, and often political sounding ads?" A) Because we are living in strange political times, and there comes a moment when we have to stand up for what is right. B) Because if a person doesn't know Lawn & Order is the best yard care company in Greenbelt by now, our ads won't convince them. C) Because yard care ads are usually boring. D) Because you have read this ad almost to the end of it. So call Dennis at 240-264-7638 for your yard care needs and stay strong, safe and young!

Mask Makers Still Focused On Local Supply Initiatives

by Cathie Meetre

Although the first crisis of mask availability is past and most people can get masks from many sources, there's still a need to supply them locally to those in need, and Greenbelt Mask Makers (GMM) continues to rise to the occasion. Over 6,000 masks have been distributed since the first efforts in March, and more than 30 Greenbelters have contributed in a variety of ways to the success of the activity. Some sew, some deliver, some maintain fabric supplies. It's another occasion where Greenbelters have pulled together to accomplish something spectacular.

Masks to Communities

Many of the masks go to local organizations in our area, for example CALMRA, a facility in Laurel that cares for adults with cognitive disabilities. Masks have also been sent to children's programs in the area and distributed by Doctors Community Hospital workers in their outreach efforts among seniors. The masks don't go to medical personnel, who are now well-supplied, but to patients and families in the community who have poor access to resources and who are often struggling in so many ways: food anxiety, illness and unemployment.

Masks at the Lake

Each week, masks from GMM are taken out by police and rangers at Buddy Attick Park to give to park visitors who would otherwise have to be turned away. This allows city staff to have positive interactions instead of angry confrontations in times that are already stressful. Kudos to Sylvia Hester, who has made the majority of these masks and continues to supply the police with 50 to 100 masks per week, and to Captain Gordon Pracht of the Greenbelt Police Department, who instigated and implemented the program. The program's fabric purchases are underwritten by a generous donation to the Freedom Foundation (the sponsoring organization for GMM) made by Eric Case of MyAffordableCoverage.com.

Masks at the Market

Masks made by GMM are also available at the Greenbelt Farmers Market. Though a donation is requested, the main purpose is to get masks on faces, so the masks are free for those who need them. Many make a donation and any money received in this way goes to buy Co-op gift cards that are distributed by the Ladies of Charity of St. Hugh's with their food pantry items. The food pantry distributes only non-perishable food – the gift cards send the shopper to the Co-op where they can stock up on fresh fruit and dairy products. Fabric for these masks is also provided by the Freedom Foundation through donations by Greenbelters.

Check out the GMM Facebook page – facebook.com/groups/231369768006318 – to see how to help and to follow the ongoing story of the masks, their makers and the distributions that are taking place. In a time of difficulty and sadness it's a boost to the spirit and gives all Greenbelters the chance to participate.

started working to come up with new ways to keep campers virtually engaged.

Kinder Camp had three camp sessions, each two weeks long, each week having its own theme. To ensure that all campers had the materials needed for camp, the staff created take-home activity bags full of various arts and crafts materials and supplies. These themed activity bags were handed out to parents and then paired with instructional videos on Google Classroom. Trozzo filled that virtual, online classroom with numerous arts and crafts videos for the parents to be able to help their campers, while Constanza and Morton added plenty of fun exercise videos and science experiments.

Each week started with a Monday Morning Meet-Up through Zoom where staff explained to the campers and their parents what was in store for the upcoming week. This was the perfect opportunity for campers to go through their activity bags and see what fun crafts and activities had been planned for them. Fast forward to Friday when everyone met again through Zoom for the Friday Show and Tell. This meeting definitely seemed to be everyone's favorite since it allowed each of the campers to share their crafts and talk about their favorite activities from the week.

Though Kinder Camp Connect was something new, not only for the campers and their families but the staff as well, it was a big success. The parents' willingness to take on more in their daily lives to help with this at-home summer camp definitely made all the difference. The hard-working, determined staff and the adaptable parents were able to pull off a fun, virtual summer camp for the kids. Though unconventional, this summer's virtual Kinder Camp Connect program turned out to be a huge hit among both the campers and their parents.

Davies' Painting Takes Best In Show at Torpedo Factory

Labyrinth of Life by Sally Davies wins Best in Show at the Torpedo Factory.

Sally Davies's painting Labyrinth of Life: View from the Top of the Whitney, NYC was awarded Best in Show at the August 2020 juried show at the Torpedo Factory in Alexandria, along with a $1,000 prize.

Labyrinth of Life is based on photos Davies took in 2015 at the Whitney Art Gallery in New York City, but she only completed this large canvas (48 x 24 inches, acrylic on gallery-wrapped canvas) a few weeks ago. The viewer is looking from the top of the Whitney onto the different outdoor decks below. Artist Mary Heilmann's colorful Sunset chairs installation is on the lower level deck, with part of the High Line Park visible in the upper left corner. So the vision for her painting is a world full of color – gorgeous, colorful skin tones on the people in the painting, and the bright colorful chairs on the outdoor deck of the Whitney museum.

Labyrinth of Life in the title refers to the visual maze of the multiple layers in the scene, and also refers to the hope for navigating this labyrinth of COVID-19 and racial injustice to make this world a better place for everyone.

Davies created a two-minute time-lapse-painting film of this artwork by photographing her canvas frequently as she painted. This short film includes a few of the photos that she used for inspiration, her pencil sketches, color studies, design plans and underpainting ... right to the final canvas. Davies's brother, a jazz musician and composer in Vancouver, British Columbia, let her use a song from one of his albums for the soundtrack for this time-lapse film which can be seen at youtu.be/LTdg1lkfGlc.

Several of Davies's time-lapse videos, including the one for Labyrinth of Life will be broadcast on GATe (Greenbelt Access Television) on a recurring segment in the Greenbelt News Reel in next week's schedule. The new schedule starts on Friday, August 21. The News Reel runs every day at 7 and 11 a.m.; 2, 6 and 11 p.m.; and midnight. GATe is Comcast 77, FiOS 19 and streaming live at greenbeltaccessstv.org.

Virtual Retro Town Fair Keeps Memory of Earliest Days Here

by Sheila Maffay-Tuthill

Greenbelt's 75th Anniversary celebration in 2012 saw the Greenbelt Museum's first Retro Town Fair. It was well received and great fun, and, more importantly, revived a tradition from the earliest days of the community. Greenbelt was truly green from the start and the energetic early citizens enjoyed the trees and green space, while also planting their own gardens, flowers and ornamental plants in their yards as well as vegetables and fruits in their allotment plots. With so much enthusiasm and success, gardeners soon wanted a way to show off their bounty, and the idea of the Town Fair was born. The first fair, held in 1939, was a huge success. The tradition held for years, with some interruption during World War II. The Town Fair evolved to become part of the Labor Fay Festival in 1954, but the displays of garden bounty fell away.

In 2012 the Greenbelt Museum and the 75th Anniversary Committee collaborated on the new Retro Town Fair at the Labor Day Festival. So many talented Greenbelters shared their homegrown garden vegetables, canned goods, needlework and much more. Over the past seven years (the Fair skipped a year), it has evolved. Though this year the event will be virtual to keep everyone safe, the Retro Town Fair will go on.

Those interested in participating must first decide which category to enter: flowers and vegetables, canned goods, needlework, crafts and, new this year, masks/face coverings. Also offerred again this year is the legacy category. Those interested in this category may share an item that is an heirloom handcraft made by the entrant or by a family member more than 10 years ago. Include relevant information about the item. These items will not be judged: they are for viewing only.

Prospective entrants must take a photo of the item. Send an email to education@greenbeltmuseum.org with Retro Town Fair Entry in the subject line. The email must state into which category the item should be entered. Prospective entrants must attach a photo to the email (use a jpeg format) and submit it between Friday, August 21 and Friday, August 28. The museum's website, greenbeltmuseum.org, will announce the winners on Sunday, September 6. Anybody with questions should contact Sheila Maffay-Tuthill at education@greenbeltmuseum.org.

The Greenbelt Museum's historic house at 10-B Crescent Road is currently closed with all staff working remotely, but check the blog and join the staff as they participate in #MuseumFromHome.
