City Receives Sustainable Maryland Champion Award

The Environmental Finance Center at the University of Maryland announced that the City of Greenbelt was one of 16 Maryland municipalities honored at the Sustainable Maryland Awards Ceremony at the Maryland Municipal League's annual fall conference in mid-October. Greenbelt was named the 2023 Sustainability Champion in the program for amassing more points than any other municipality and was certified at the Silver level.

Highlights of Greenbelt's accomplishments include:

The Greenbelt MakerSpace, located in the Granite Building, created a repair café that teaches residents how to repair things like common household appliances, jewelry, furniture and

Election 2023

Answers to Question 3 The News Review once again asked candidates for election to the Greenbelt City Council to respond to questions posed by this newspaper. Answers are limited to 150 words. If an answer exceeds the limit, the answer is cut off at that point. Responses will be published in various orders to avoid favoring candidates. Here are the answers we received to our third and final question.

Question 3. Greenbelt has a lot of unused office space and retail space. Are there ideas you'd suggest or support for filling or repurposing it?

Jenni Pompi

If elected to the city council, I would consider redirecting some remaining ARPA funds to building/storefront improvement grants for existing businesses, small-business grants and a legacy business program to offer special support to businesses that have been in Greenbelt for many vears In addition I think the city should consider a business relocation grant program, like the ones in Rockville and Laurel, to encourage business to move to our city.

I would also like to see the city complete the purchase of the Armory, which is a gateway property for Greenbelt, and put it to use. Beltway Plaza Mall's redevelopment has been stalled due to lack of funds, but I hope that project gets moving so we can soon determine a future for those properties. Finally, if the FBI decides to relocate to Greenbelt, I believe this will drive development to our city and help fill offices and retail spaces.

Matthew Inzeo

Let's acknowledge that empty offices are a national problem affecting many urban areas, including the D.C. area. The pandemic and resulting work-at-home trend made the problem worse. Many federal offices are also still largely empty.

Let's embrace aggressive solu-

City tax breaks for office building owners, to pass on to potential tenants in lower rent.

Council, voters may use any of the five polling sites for in-person voting on Tuesday, November 7: Community Center, Police Station, Greenbriar Community Center, Schrom Hills Park Clubhouse or Springhill Lake Recreation Center.

The county voter registration cards that voters received in the mail in the last few days implied otherwise, which is incorrect.

Schrom Hills Fall Fest Weathers High Winds to Deliver Smiles

by Emily Jacob

One of the Greenbelt Pumpkin Festival's three pumpkin carving events took place at the Fall Festival at Schrom Hills Park on Saturday.

Greenbelt Recreation put on its annual Fall Fest in Schrom Hills Park on Saturday, October 21, and, despite the windy weather and a week's delay for rain, the event had a great turnout, as it is a community favorite.

The event was free to enter, and attendees were offered their choice of complimentary buttered popcorn or kettle corn and apple cider at the pavilion.

Multiple picnic tables were foam-tipped arrows. Greenbelt set up for pumpkin carving and decorating and they quickly filled with children and families working diligently on their pumpkins. There was also face painting, hayrides and open space next to the playground saved for this year's new attractions: Bubble Ball, a game with inflatable balls that encase the players, and Arrow Tag, a game in which players are furnished with bows and Recreation staff members and volunteers working the event were especially excited to see how those would turn out but due to the extreme wind, the games, which involved inflatables unfortunately had to be canceled.

A.J. Sesay was one of those who was most looking forward to seeing how the new activities fared and had predicted that

Year-round Ice Skating Campaign

Have you ever enjoyed skating at Herbert Wells Ice Rink? Would you want it to remain open all year round? If so, consider writing a brief letter to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission (M-NCPPC) by Wednesday, November 1 at PublicAffairs@ppd.mnppc.org. It would be greatly appreciated and would benefit the process of giving Wells walls.

Photovoltaics: Where Next?

I was recently reminded of the Co-op's successful Rays on the Roof campaign that raised money to replace the failing roof and install solar panels. My question now is: Who's next?

Every roof is an opportunity to offset electric costs and have a tangible, positive impact on helping mitigate climate change. Rays on the Roof showed once again that there is an appetite in our community to support our local businesses and continue Greenbelt's history of environmental stewardship.

Any bare roofs out there that could use some love? I see plenty of opportunities in old Greenbelt. How about East and West Greenbelt?

Finally, thank you to all of the folks that made Rays on the Roof possible

Stop Work Order

A thank you to Bonnie Schrack for her story about Royal Farms building atop the Toaping Castle historical site. Wow ... just, wow. It's a story not only about corporate greed wantonly defying an order to protect a historical site but also a reminder that our entire city throbs with the ghosts of enslaved human beings and their white masters.

Overlaying those two aspects of the story is the fact that we Americans have allowed corporations to develop our cities for cars rather than human beings. Here's an idea: Next time, rather than building another gas station, how about a park devoted to the contemplation of our ghosts, crying out for remembrance?

Killers of the Flower Moon

Based on David Grann's broadly lauded best-selling book, the film, directed by Martin Scorsese, is set in 1920s Oklahoma and depicts the serial murder of members of the oil-wealthy Osage Nation, a string of brutal crimes that came to be known as the Reign of Terror. Among the film's stars are Leonardo DeCaprio, Robert De Niro, Jess Plemons, Tantoo Cardinal and John Lithgow. Said critic David Sexton of the New Statesman: "This is grand, classic film-making, an American tragedy of the highest order."

Taylor Swift: The Eras Tour

The cultural phenomenon continues on the big screen in this music documentary. Taylor Swift fans can immerse themselves in this once-in-a-lifetime concert film experience with a breathtaking, cinematic view of the history-making tour.

Joan Baez: I Am a Noise

Neither a conventional biopic nor a traditional concert film, the film is a raw and intimate portrait of the legendary folk singer and activist that shifts back and forth through time as it follows Baez on her final tour and delves into her extraordinary archive, including newly discovered home movies, diaries, artwork, therapy tapes and audio recordings. Baez is remarkably revealing about her life on and off stage. A searingly honest look at a living legend, this film is a compelling and deeply personal exploration of an iconic artist who has never told the full truth of her life, as she experienced it,

Toy Story of Terror!

Woody and the gang go on a road trip, when an unexpected event leads them to a roadside motel. After one of the toys goes missing, the others find themselves caught up in a mysterious, monstrous and terrifying sequence of events that must be solved before they all suffer the same fate.

Kuch Kuch Hota Hai

Before dying, a woman (Rani Mukerji) leaves letters asking her daughter to play matchmaker for her father (Shahrukh Khan) and his college friend (Kajol).

Nosferatu

In this highly influential silent horror film, the mysterious Count Orlok (Max Schreck) summons Thomas Hutter (Gustav von Wangenheim) to his remote Transylvanian castle in the mountains. The eerie Orlok seeks to buy a house near Hutter and his wife, Ellen (Greta Schroeder). After Orlok reveals his vampire nature, Hutter struggles to escape the castle, knowing that Ellen is in grave danger. Meanwhile Orlok's servant, Knock (Alexander Granach), prepares for his master to arrive at his new home.

Our Neighbors

Our condolences to the family and friends of Melvin Robert Kent, a Greenbelter since 1960, who died October 15. He was often seen at Braden Field coaching soccer, Little League and women's softball in the 1970s and 1980s, and watching men's and women's softball games. An art connoisseur, he especially enjoyed the art and craft fair at the annual Festival of Lights.

Condolences also to the family and friends of Royce Buzzell, who died on October 11. The city flag has been flying at half-staff in his honor. Royce's birth was announced in Our Neighbors in the November 1, 1956, issue of the News Review. A poem he wrote about the American flag was recited in a Flag Day observance at Greenbelt Elementary School in June of 1967, and he was given a Greenbelt Lions Club award when he was a senior at Parkdale High School in 1974.

Congratulations to Joyce Mangum who is celebrating her 95th birthday and her 95th year in Greenbelt.

Congratulations to Frank De-Bernardo, a parishioner at St. Hugh's Church who was part of a group who enjoyed an audience with Pope Francis on October 17 in Rome.

October 29 3 p.m. The Long View: Remembering the Ancestors

Rev. Ann Kadlecek with Worship Associate Carol Carter Walker

Humans in many places, cultures and religious traditions choose this time of year to remember and honor the ancestors, and to renew connections across the divide of time and death.

In this service of remembrance, we will recall the gifts of our ancestors and our ties to them, as we honor those we loved and lost, and who live on in our hearts and memories. All are invited to bring a photo or other item that symbolizes someone you would like to remember today, which will be displayed during the service

Flower Moon, describing the vicious greed, theft and murder perpetrated on the Osage Nation. You may think this story of theft doesn't hit close to home, but you'd be wrong. The Morrill Act of 1862 funded 52 land-grant universities, including University of Maryland, by taking away 11 million acres from roughly 250 Native American tribes, including 462,475 acres from the Osage Nation achieved through violent seizure or forced through treaty.

Our local university would receive vouchers for land in California, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, South Dakota and Wisconsin taken from dozens of tribes, including the Osage Nation. Participating universities were required to conserve and invest the principal if they sold those lands to build and enrich their endowments in the process. University of Maryland made a reported $112,500 on just under 203,000 acres of stolen lands that seeded their endowment, an amount far greater when inflation is factored in.

The Morrill Act was just one of many cuts to the Osage Nation. By the early 1900s it would only own a fraction of its 1.5 million acres of former ancestral lands that only with grit and determination it is now piecing back together one parcel at a time. If you see the movie, don't stop there. Dig deeper to really understand the systemic theft that was perpetuated at the expense of Native lives and lands from tribes all over this country including right here at home.

Melissa Ann Ehrenreich (Information in this letter to the editor was sourced through landgrabu.org, extensively researched by High Country News, which includes an exhaustive database of the parcels received by land grant universities under the Morrill Act of 1862.)

"From recycling to composting, bike paths and the overhead tree canopies and our soon-to-be enacted single-use plastic bag ban, the city continually works to take responsibility for a more sustainable future."

19th Utopia Film Festival Brings Small Films to Greenbelt's Screens

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

"Films can change your life," said Frank Gervasi, one of the organizers of the Utopia Film Festival. "Would there be a Black Lives Matter or police reform without all those cell phone videos?" he asked a full room at the Festival's kickoff reception on Friday evening. "Would we care about Ukraine, or Gaza City or Israel without all of those images and the TV press conferences? I don't think so. I don't think we would know about it," he said. "On the upside, our hearts are warmed by film We learn through films, we're angered, we discover, we're saddened, we laugh, we cry. It's all through film and all through these video images we see and that's been going on for 120 years, really," said Gervasi.

Independent films are among his favorites. The Festival has seen as many as 180 submissions from up to 30 different countries, Gervasi said, and they select only 35 of the best. "They're all outstanding," said Gervasi of the selected films. "They shape our lives, they really do. They've changed my life," said Gervasi, who said his diet and whole lifestyle has been shaped by films and what he's learned and been inspired by from them. "All you filmmakers, you're really important. I mean that," he concluded.

"It's a real privilege to have so many creative people in the room and have that focus on the arts, which has also been a really important part of Greenbelt's heritage and legacy going forward," said Mayor Emmett Jordan as he welcomed visiting directors and filmmakers to Greenbelt. Executive Director Chris Haley invited folks to get involved in what he described as a very accessible, small film festival, where after 19 years there's still a chance to "get in on the ground floor," he said. He then recognized each of the filmmakers who were gathered in the city council room. The most local director in the audience was Jonathan Alexander of Hyattsville, bringing his film, Namesake, about the renaming of a local park. Others had travelled much further. Al Mertens, the director of Thank You, Amelia Earhart had come from Oklahoma. "We took the short drive from NYC and this is better," he told the crowd. Other filmmakers included Renee Green, whose film The Coal Women is set in the Virgin Islands and depicts the lives of the women who coaled the steam ships there and really "ignited the industrial revolution," she said; and Jen Koiter, writer and producer of Birds of the Air, which she described as "a subversively wholesome transgender coming out story," and several

The winners of this year's festival awards were Eighteen Tuesdays, directed by Merrick Apple Presser and Tommy Cobby Sheridan, which won the category of Outstanding Utopian Vision; Namesake, directed by Jonathan Alexander, for Outstanding Short Film; Sew to Say, directed by Rakel Aguirre, for Best Documentary; Coral Reef Restoration, directed by Asa Miller, for Best Youth Film; and Town Destroyer, directed by Deborah Kaufman and Alan Snitow winning the New Deal Spirit Award.

programs for local residents starting their own businesses.

Let's also upgrade the neighborhood:

Confront the crime problem in Greenbelt West, finally, including camera surveillance. Businesses considering relocation check crime statistics.

Encourage modernization of Beltway Plaza.

Make Greenbelt West a "happening place" where businesses and workers want to go.

The FBI moving to Greenbelt would likely solve the entire office vacancy problem, as FBI contractors would seek offices near the agency. To support that idea, write to: Joseph R. Biden, 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

Ric Gordon

Greenbelt is an ever-growing city, as we continue to grow in population the services and staff must meet the need. A space study was done recently concerning space which looked at better uses of current city space. I believe once we officially acquire the Armory from the federal government that will be a game changer for space that could help the city in many ways including the fire department, city administration and CARES services etc. Which would allow us to make use of and update other buildings for additional space. We should also work with Franklin Park about my idea I have mentioned to them of using the unused second pool and basketball court on Franklin Park property to create additional recreation space where they can partner with our city recreation department for youth activities. I feel an addition to the municipal building is a solid idea for more space.

Silke Pope

Strategies that could be pursued to fill empty spaces would be to target businesses that have employees returning to onsite work and government agencies and universities that need additional space for satellite offices.

The city could work with property owners to market unused office space to potential companies and government agencies, using a vibrant, coordinated and professional marketing campaign that reaches out to the entire region. Creative incentives for moving operations to Greenbelt should be explored.

As for retail space, the city could provide seminars to existing and prospective businesses on how to best advertise their business and on small business financing and small grants that are available locally. This could act as an engine for increasing small businesses within the community.

Using vacant office space for housing would be complicated but possible as this use would require zoning changes and the city does not have planning and zoning authority.

Danielle McKinney

On the Greenbelt City Council, I will work to enhance residents' quality of life by helping to repurpose unused spaces to address key gaps and inequities with creative and forward thinking. Affordable housing is instrumental to quality of life. So I'll first advocate to convert unused spaces into affordable housing units, which could benefit seniors or other residents looking to downsize or save for a future home purchase.

Safe, sustainable and inclusive recreation is also essential for a thriving community. We should convert unused spaces into recreation and community activities that are lacking in Greenbelt East and West. By creating spaces like art studios, athletic courts or indoor vertical gardens, we can provide greater recreational options for residents across Green-

Finally, I'll support economic development that aligns with our community priorities, like transforming unused spaces to attract new, innovative and environmentally responsible businesses through pop-up shops, business incubators and more.

Kristen Weaver

Filling unused space requires collaboration between the city and organizations like the Greenbelt Business Alliance. A recent forum highlighted the need for expertise in commercial leases and other technical aspects for aspiring entrepreneurs. The city can be a connector to those with the proper expertise through workshops and training. Through American Rescue Plan Act funds, we provided business grants, including for capital improvements. While that money is timelimited, we can seek funding for a revolving fund to continue supporting businesses starting up or relocating in Greenbelt. Complete repurposing of some spaces may be warranted, especially unused office space as collective work habits have changed. I would like to explore options and partnerships for reworking office space into affordable housing, especially in areas close to the Metro. There will be challenges, since office buildings weren't built with the internal systems and structure needed for residential units, but it's worth considering seriously.

Emmett Jordan

Greenbelt's 2022 office vacancy rate reached 29.18 percent (source: CommercialCafe.com), with retail vacancies even higher. As multi-year leases expire and space needs shift, we must focus on business attraction and retention. Additionally, we should explore creative repurposing options for vacant spaces.

Before Covid-19, the DMV area already faced excess office space. In 2014, Greenbelt enlisted Economist Anirban Basu to help shape our economic development strategies. Basu recommended using incentives and tax credits to encourage building owners to renovate and upgrade. We're allocating some Federal ARPA funding for this, but we can also support repurposing incentives.

Cookies on the Bridge Seeks Volunteers

It's time for some sweetness for the students. This is a call for volunteers who are looking for something fun and worthwhile to do: consider Cookies on the Bridge. On weekdays from 3:15 to 4 p.m., volunteers meet at the Spellman Overpass to offer cookies (and carrots) to students coming home from Eleanor Roosevelt High School. The goal is to ensure the safety of the students as they make their way home.

Check Out Your Blood Pressure When You Check Out a Book

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

Nursing students, in partnership with the Prince George's County Memorial Library System, provide blood pressure screenings at Greenbelt Library.

At the Greenbelt Library you can check out more than books - on Mondays you can also get your blood pressure checked and join a team of University of Maryland nursing students to learn more about various health topics. The goal is to improve health equity through free resources accessible to library patrons. Each week, under the supervision of clinical faculty, the students are conducting free health screenings, referrals, health education and classes on a variety of topics, including stress reduction, healthy eating and nutrition, managing chronic illness and low-impact exercises. (Note: Students cannot provide first aid, wound care, emergency services, diagnosis of illness or vaccinations.) On Monday, October 23, on the ground floor of the Library, one nursing student told the News Review they'd already met with eight people and checked their blood pressure within 90 minutes of the day's session, which runs from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Clinical Instructor

Sarah Chapman said the team takes the opportunity to share more information with those who stop to get their blood pressure checked, particularly information about the flu vaccine and the RSV vaccine that are available for older residents.

On Monday, nursing student Bukola Oladipupo gave a presentation on diabetes: risk factors, symptoms and living with the disease. The presentation was followed by gentle exercises that she led from the front of the room. One woman in the audience comes for the presentations and exercises every week. She'd shared information about cholesterol she learned the week before with her sister, she said.

For the students the Talk Health program offers them a chance to get hands-on community nursing experience. Oladipupo says working directly with the community is extremely fulfilling, especially when it comes to educating them about the importance of managing their health. "A lot of people – after checking them, we realize that they didn't take their blood pressure medication that morning," Oladipupo said. "Letting them know how important it is to be compliant with the medication regimen - it's something rewarding for me."

"Public libraries and public health are a natural combination," said Karin Russ, an assistant professor at University of Maryland. "Libraries are one of the last free spaces and provide the public with access to information and technology," she said. "And now, they will provide the ability to talk with health professionals one-on-one."

The Talk Health program with the University of Maryland School of Nursing is running each Monday through November 13. The schedule is 11 a.m.-12:30 p.m. blood pressure screenings; 12:30-1:30 p.m. presentation and learning opportunity; 1:30-2 p.m. low impact cardio; 2-3:30 p.m. blood pressure screenings and high blood pressure education. The Talk Heath topic for October 30 is Flu, Covid and RSV vaccination, November 6 is healthy eating and November 13 is stress management.

Springhill Lake Elementary Listed Among America's Healthiest Schools

The Alliance for a Healthier Generation, founded by the American Heart Association and the William J. Clinton Foundation, recently recognized three Prince George's County Public Schools (PGCPS) elementary schools for their efforts to transform their sites into healthier places for students and staff. Among them was Springhill Lake Elementary School.

Springhill Lake is among 781 schools nationwide to be named as America's Healthiest Schools for the 2022-2023 school year. The recognition, awarded by Alliance for a Healthier Generation, a leading children's health organization, honors schools' dedication to supporting the health and well-being of students, staff and families.

"We're honored to receive this national recognition highlighting our efforts to create healthier learning environments for students and staff," said PGCPS Superintendent Millard House II. "Nutrition, food access, enhanced physical and health education and thoughtful wellness policies all contribute to schools where our students can grow and thrive."

Springhill Lake Elementary was recognized for healthy policies and practices across categories including: cultivating staff well-being, increasing family and community engagement, improving nutrition and food access, implementing local wellness policy, bolstering physical education/ physical activity, enriching health education, promoting tobacco-free schools and supporting school health services.

the county, say county representatives. The Greenbelt facility was acquired at a cost of $8.9 million and is designated for extensive modernization and the expansion of essential services. County government has invested $18 million in the new health center, substantially strengthening public health services by enabling the expansion of vaccinations and critical public health services, while also meeting operational, storage, meeting and office space requirements.

The new health center will serve as a hub for a wide range of healthcare services, including behavioral health, dental care, disease investigation and control, a reproductive health resource center for sexually transmitted infection services and more. It will also be equipped to reduce patient wait times, enhance staffto-patient ratios, introduce modern equipment like telehealth capabilities and streamline patient processing. The larger facility will also allow the Health Department to expand healthcare services in the future based on community needs.

'In its expanded capacity, this facility is tailored to meet the ever-changing healthcare needs of our community," stated Dr. Matthew Levy, Prince George's County health officer. "This new health center highlights our commitment to broadening healthcare access and delivering important public health services.'

to continue to be a voice to help bridge neighborhoods and to build community across all Greenbelt. As a city, we need to:

- Support economic recovery and growth through thoughtful development
- Proactively pursue equity, fair practices, and justice in city policies
- Expand and improve parks and recreation opportunities across the city

My leadership in community and economic development positions Greenbelt well for uncertainty. Our new staff proactively works on business retention and attraction, and we can do more.

While residential conversions may not be practical short-term, Greenbelt's strength lies in its medical and professional services. Let's capitalize on this and incentivize these businesses to locate here.

Bill Orleans

"Owners" of Greenbelt's commercial properties don't respect that its residents, or its council, should expect to define their uses of "their" property. We should not agree with them, of course, but the law is on their side, and this is an example that "the law" sometimes "is an ass."

Except for old-town, downtown, the original plan, Greenbelt's various commercial spaces were developed on single landuse models now 50 years old, or older.

Their "owners" seek the services Greenbelt provides, and such public subsidy they can get, but when their business model is failing, and the market is weakening, and their profits aren't increasing, they, at least some, seek abatements on their property taxes, and from Greenbelt's residential taxpayers, get reimbursed.

Nuts. They are in business to profit, and when they don't, they should eat the loss. Alternatively, they could cooperate with the city Productive land is instrumental to the continued financial strength of our city. Underutilized space is a product of changes in the habits of the people of our city and is worsened by outdated zoning from Prince George's County. I will work with the county to loosen these restrictions and allow our city to flourish.

To fill this space for its original purpose, we must lower the barrier for small businesses. Mandatory parking minimums inflate the entry cost of running a business by having to purchase the building and an oversized and underused parking lot. We should also incentivize activity venues to entice people to visit.

To repurpose these areas would require a zoning overhaul, which I will support. Many cities are converting offices into apartments. Loosening zoning restrictions to allow different kinds of businesses in an area is a good compromise, allowing entrepreneurs to use the building for their purpose.

Pedestrian Dies in Scooter Collision on Greenbelt Rd.

those would get the most attention. He has always enjoyed the Fall Fest, attending the event as a staff member in previous years. This time was his second year overseeing it as event coordinator.

"It's cool to see the families coming out and everybody having fun, and it's cool to see the different elements of fall," he told the News Review.

Two of the volunteers, Lillian Rankel and Ella Galban, talked with the News Review as they staffed one of the pumpkin-decorating tables. One of Rankel's favorite parts of the Fall Fest are the hayrides, while Galban most enjoys the popcorn and the cider. Both young women have happily volunteered with Greenbelt Recreation for a while in various capacities, including participating in the weekly Teen Takeover on Fridays and working as camp counselors. Galban said she likes volunteering for Greenbelt Recreation because she gets to help the general public. She also enjoys the fact that it's youth focused. "I like how we center on the youth, so that way they become role models in the community," said Galban. Rankel explained that she's lived here all her life, so she likes volunteering because she gets to participate in these community events with people from her neighborhood.

The ferocious wind that blew away the possibilities of games with inflatables also led to the cancellation of the Schrom Hills pumpkin walk that evening, where the carved pumpkins would have lined the park's paths. Instead, the participants were able to take their jack-olanterns home with them from the festival. A great time was had by all and hopefully the weather will be more favorable next year.

Pumpkins and Faces Aglow At Roosevelt Center Carving

by Cavit Ireland

There were bright smiles from pumpkins and people at this year's Roosevelt Center Pumpkin Carving.

At the event – free for everyone – families and people of all ages went to work designing and crafting jack-o'-lanterns Friday evening October 20. Sharp-toothed faces laughed while witches, ghouls and goblins danced on pumpkins placed around the base of the Mother and Child statue.

One sporty pumpkin donned the number 10 with "Messi" carved into it.

Some experienced artists brought their own knives, while others took their first stab at the task, "I never want to carve again!" exclaimed 6-year-old Karissa, while her mother, Kimberly Zevallos scooped seeds and guts.

Amid the pumpkin debris, there was plenty of Halloween spirit going around. Some had their costumes all planned out, while others like 9-year-old Leighton Whitfield, are holding off and leaving it for a surprise. A first-time carver herself, Leighton gave her pumpkin a winky face

Volunteers passed out fresh pumpkins as people came, carved and conquered their gourds. By the end, there was a small army of jack-o'-lanterns illuminating the square.

From the Center, the jack-o'-lanterns were transported by volunteers to the North Woods for a community Pumpkin Walk the following evening. The carving and walk are a part of the Greenbelt Pumpkin Festival which hosts a variety of Halloween-themed community events each year leading up to the holiday. The carvings and walks through pumpkin-lined woods have become a fall favorite for many.

Cavit Ireland is a student at the University of Maryland's Philip Merrill College of Journalism writing for the News Review.

The Greenbelt Pumpkin Festival Delights Again

The Greenbelt Pumpkin Festival this year organized three carving events and two pumpkin walks (though one was cancelled due to high winds). Last weekend there were carvings at the Roosevelt Center on Friday night and at Schrom Hills Park on Saturday afternoon, as well as a magical walk through the North Woods on Saturday evening. If you missed some of the festivities, there's still time to join a final carving event that will take place this Friday, October 27, starting at 3:30 p.m. at Springhill Lake Recreation Center.

The Greenbelt Pumpkin Festival is run by volunteers and funded entirely by donations from the community – indials who attend and the community – individuals who attend and support, and local businesses and organizations. The Rotary Club of Greenbelt was the fiscal sponsor this year, handling all the finances. Greenbelt Coop sourced pumpkins at an excellent discount, and CHEARS (Chesapeake Education, Arts and Research Society) helped dispose of pumpkin waste responsibly.

Although not a city sponsored event, the City of Greenbelt provides amazing support to make the events possible as well. And of course, there would be no Pumpkin Walk without the Greenbelt Forest Preserve Advisory Board and their efforts to keep the woods wild and available to the community. "The Pumpkin Festival is our community at its best," said festival coordinator Stacy Stewart, "everyone participating and making something magical, and we are always looking for more volunteers."

Greenbelt Middle Hosts Hispanic Festival and Resource Network

by Lois Rosado

Greenbelt Middle School (GMS) was buzzing with excitement on Friday, October 6, when a celebration of Hispanic Heritage Month took place. Students and families enjoyed face painting, dancing and lots of delicious South American food. Youngsters hugged Mey, the mental health mascot, who greeted everyone with enthusiasm. Mayor Emmett Jordan came to greet parents and school staff and thank them for organizing the event.

An Array of Resources

In addition to a celebration, there was an array of resources. The Guatemalan consulate attended to show support and provide immigration information. Also attending was Alejandro Pérez, from the Education Department of the University of Maryland, who is planning a literacy program for Spanish speakers not literate in their own language. The Parent Teacher Association Vice President Danielle Wood was present to recruit more parents, and Thurman Jones, from the Patriots Training Center, was on hand to inform interested parents and students about the coming Science, Technology, Engineering and Math (STEM) learning opportunities at GMS. The school's therapist, Estefany Larios, was also there to meet students and their families. Deji Ayoku of Greenbelt CARES was distributing literature about city programs and Youth Coordinator Devin Dyer, from Community Youth Advance, shared information about the youth mentoring program.

Students and Families

Principal Marcellus Clement was effusive about the student and Themer family turnout and participation and very glad for the community resource groups that attended to provide those families with valuable information. Clement and Assistant Principal Camille Butler were enthusiastically greeted by

Davies' Art on Display in Arts Center Lobby Through November

On Tuesday, October 3, visitors followed musicians playing lively music down the steps from Roosevelt Center to the Greenbelt Arts Center. The Pandemic Sisters & Dave (guitar, ukulele and vocals) entertained visitors at Sally Davies' solo art exhibit Up in the Air in the theater lobby. A steady stream of visitors enjoyed a fun evening of music and art.

Up in the Air includes dancers, birds in flight, mythical pixies and fairies dancing in the air. Davies' paintings are created with translucent papers, which add to the magical feel. All the paintings' titles are derived from Shakespeare quotes, lines from songs or ballet names - which seems fitting for a theater lobby. Viewers can challenge themselves to see how many sources of the titles they recognize. Davies, a Greenbelt resident, teaches classes in watercolor, printmaking and art exploration at the Community

Center

ERHS Girls Soccer Squads Win ERHS Volleyball Moves Final Games, Head to Varsity

by Patrick Gleason

Fifteen minutes remained in the Eleanor Roosevelt High School junior varsity soccer season with the Raiders and the Oakland Mills Scorpions knotted at zero. After a first half where the Raiders possessed the more dangerous scoring opportunities, a season-ending tie appeared imminent. Then, freshman Bayleigh Galie intervened. Nearly 35 yards out from the goal Galie directed a free kick that lofted through the mid-October sky - turning to hues of evening - and slipped past the Scorpion keeper for the game's lone goal. Galie's first goal solidified a season-ending celebration for a Raider team that battled scheduling difficulties all season, including four cancellations, en route to a 5-2-1 record. The 1-0 victory proved fitting for a resilient team whose two biggest victories – this final win and their triumph over Bowie earlier this fall - contained late secondhalf goals.

Afterward, the varsity squad maintained the momentum with a 3-0 victory. Juniors Jada Savage and Gabriella Martinez threatened the Scorpion defense throughout the match, first striking midway through the first half when Savage reached the end line and found sophomore Claudia van der Have in the middle of the box; she redirected the pass straight at the goalkeeper who could not react quickly enough. As the ball found its way through her legs into the net, the Raiders had secured a lead they would never relinquish. Roosevelt heightened the pressure in the second half with Martinez's consistent ability to switch fields from center forward. After a Scorpion handball in the box, junior Sadie Swart converted her third penalty kick in a week for the second Raider goal. Savage then sealed the victory with a well-placed shot to the far post after running in behind the Oakland Mills back line.

She celebrated with two fingers pointed to the sky as the Raiders cemented their number one seed for the regional playoffs that start with a Friday October 27 home match at 6 p.m. after the boys host a 4 p.m. game.

With a win the Raiders would advance to the region final scheduled for Halloween; however, the Raiders will not face Bowie in the region final this season if they advance as the state athletic association realigned regions this year, moving the Bulldogs to the East Region. The South region title could likely be a matchup between the Raiders and the C.H. Flowers Jaguars whom Roosevelt bested 4-0 in early October. An 11-1-1 regular season record is a start, but the Raiders desire the region crown that eluded them last season.

to the Championship Match

by Scott Fifield

It took a couple of extra days, but Eleanor Roosevelt High School's volleyball team defeated C.H. Flowers High School on Saturday morning 25-22, 25-14, 23-25, 25-16. The match was supposed to be held on October 18, but a water main break at the high school postponed the match for three days, excruciating since the teams had been pointing toward this match for over a month. Both teams entered 9-0 in the Prince George's 4A league so the Raiders now control their fate to win the league and play in the county championship match on October 31 at Flowers (against either Oxon Hill or Gwynn Park).

Individually, Roosevelt was led by senior middle hitter Christiana Alapa whose offensive output has slowly increased weekby-week. On Saturday her 10 kills came mostly in key situations and helped the Raiders spread out the very large blockers from Flowers. Roosevelt, 10-3 overall, and Flowers, 10-2, are also competing for the number one seed in the regional playoffs that begin on November 6.

Sophomore Esther Obisesan and the Raiders head into the playoffs as the number one seed in the 4A South Region, posting an 11-1-1 regular season record.
