Co-op Marks Forty-Fifth Anniversary

by Eleanor Santoro

The Greenbelt Co-op is a real survivor. From its opening in 1937 to the marking of its 45th anniversary this Friday, the supermarket has been subject to expansions, changes, and setbacks. Yet through it all... the store has endured.

The Co-op has relocated several times. In 1937 it was situated next to the Utopia Theater. In 1938 it stood where Community Savings and Loan (Twin Pines office) and the Credit Union are now. The big move, however, occurred on November 9, 1948, when the new Co-op supermarket opened in its present location.

Prior to the opening of this much larger store, temporary grocery services, such as the "pantry store," were provided to serve the needs of residents. John Brown, former assistant manager for Co-op (1948-50) recalled the "Pantry Store", a traveling co-op that made rounds daily (including Sunday) to serve the needs of residents. Brown, who was the first to operate this store on wheels, remembers how he would blow the horn and how Greenbelters would flock to buy from the variety of goods with which the bus was stocked.

The 1948 store introduced the first self-service meat department in the Washington area. The store, the only grocery in Greenbelt, prospered. Later the Co-op expanded into Takoma Park, Wheaton, and Kensington. In the spring of 1962, disaster struck the local store when it was devastated by fire. According to local resident Ben Rosenzweig, who served at that time as president of Greenbelt Consumer Services, Inc. (now GCI), damages amounted to over a quarter of a million dollars. "Luckily," said Rosenzweig, "insurance covered most of the damage." The balance of needed capital was supplied by about 350 loyal and good-hearted members. Six months later the new store opened. Rosenzweig attributes the store's construction to the work of "brilliant economizers."

By 1967, GCS had expanded to a total of 21 supermarkets. Gradually, however, as supermarket the GCI Council, said that "energy efficient" and "customer convenient" systems replaced old ones. Webb described how ceilings were lowered for attractiveness and to conserve energy, new technical systems were installed that re-used energy, item placement was readjusted to conserve labor and make goods easier to stock, and store aisles were widened to make shopping conditions more pleasant and convenient for customers.

Supermarket Division Manager Richard King said that several factors led to the decision to refurbish the supermarket. A major consideration was the aging of the old equipment. King also said that the Co-op wanted to make a better, more efficient shopping environment and thus better keep up with its competitors.

The major competitor was the Greenbelt Safeway (the largest of its kind in the area). Webb said that before Safeway opened, the Co-op grossed about $100,000 per week. After Safeway was established, the weekly gross was knocked down to $60,000. "Now it's up to $80,000," said Webb. He added, "It's a slow process."

Just last year the Co-op was forced to close its popular bakery because of insufficient earnings. Officials say that the drug store operates at a loss but will continue in order to serve the needs of local residents.

New Developments

Management has been experimenting with methods to serve various consumers more efficiently, and to increase membership. In an effort to boost membership, the Board of Directors set the membership fee at $1, as opposed to $2. See CO-OP, page 4, col. 2

Celebration at Co-op

A photo exhibition by Greenbelt Cooperative, Inc., high-lighting 45 years of service in Greenbelt opens tomorrow morning in the Co-op Supermarket. Mayor Richard Castaldi will cut the ribbon at 10 a.m. Longtime early resident of Greenbelt and early leader in developing the co-op, Donald Cooper, will reminisce about early days. Ben Rosenzweig will emcee. A plaque will be presented honoring the members of the Cooperative Organizing Committee of 1937. Coffee and cake will be served by Ethyl Rosenzweig, Mellie Comproni and John Webb.

competition increased, the corporation started to lose money. At present, there are only five Co-op supermarkets left — in Greenbelt, Westminster, Wheaton, Falls Church and Severna Park.

Remodeling

Another turning point in Co-op history occurred in 1980 with the remodeling of the Greenbelt supermarket. John Webb, Representative (former Chairman) of works director for the expeditious, careful, and cautious way the crews came in and built the pathway. But, Shell went on, he could not believe what he had just heard. In his view, APB showed a total lack of consideration for what has happened in Greenbriar, with concrete and grass left exposed and no provision for confining the "kids" to the sidewalk. Shell said it had been his understanding that the city would do something to restrict the "kids" to the pathway, and expressed his wish that a high fence be erected for that purpose. He does not want the "kids" to be able to cut behind the buildings.

City Manager James Giese replied that the city had tried to negotiate landscaping and related issues as a means of reaching settlement with Greenbriar Phase I owners who were attempting to block condemnation of land for the pathway. This negotiation effort fell through and the case went to trial. Giese said there is no space on the city's right-of-way for landscaping, and he believes the city now has no legal obligation to provide landscaping or fencing on Greenbriar Phase I land adjacent to the new path. Giese tempered this by saying that he has told the Greenbriar Phase I Board of Directors through one of its members that the city council could decide to help Greenbriar despite the lack of a legal obligation to do so. Giese emphasized that to date he had received no information from the board of directors as to what the Phase I residents want in the way of landscaping or fencing.

Mayor Richard Castaldi agreed that council needs to hear a solid unified expression from the residents as to their problems relating to the path, and what they would like the city to do. Councilman Richard Pilski said he did not think the council would be so hard-hearted that it would not help the residents once it was known what they want, and urged, "Let's bring the city together." The council agreed that city staff should make a further effort to learn the wishes of the Greenbriar Phase I residents.

Overpass West End

The Advisory Planning Board in its report also recommended that the city work with Greenbelt Homes, Inc., to connect the west end of the parkway overpass with the existing interior walkway system. APB suggested the following:

Castaldi, Democrats Sweep

by Elaine Skolnik

In keeping with the State and County trend, Greenbelt voters took advantage of their 3 to 1 edge in registration and gave the Democratic ticket a sweeping victory in the General Election on Tuesday, November 2. Leading the ticket in Greenbelt was favorite son, Mayor Richard Castaldi, who received a whopping 86.4% of the votes cast for the 4th Council District seat. In the District he won handily, capturing 78% of the total vote (see chart page 3).

Another big winner in Greenbelt was Steny Hoyer, who garnered 81% of the Greenbelt ballots in the contest for the 5th Congressional District seat. His margin in the entire District was also 80%.

Paul Sarbanes in his quest for reelection to the U. S. Senate racked up a large vote in Greenbelt — 3,586 to 1,315 for Lawrence Hogan. Sarbanes received 73% of the vote to 27% for Hogan. This race was interesting to Greenbelt political pundits since both Sarbanes and Hogan rolled over their opponents locally in previous races. Incomplete county results showed Sarbanes leading Hogan 2 to 1.

In the gubernatorial contest, Greenbelters gave Democratic candidate Harry Hughes 77% of the votes cast, in the county about 76%. Democrats Louis Goldstein and Stephen Sachs trounced their opponents for Comptroller and Attorney General respectively.

Democratic candidate Parris Glendening easily beat out Republican Ann Shoch, 3,336 to 1,162. His Greenbelt margin of 71% gave early signs that he would have no difficulty in carrying the county which he did by 72%.

The State Senate seat was captured easily by Leo Green, who received 77% of the local vote. Green collected 3,399 votes; his opponent Burton Oliver, 1000. The total votes in Legislative District 23 gave him 70%.

In the contest for House of Delegates, the Democratic ticket of Joan Pitkin, Gerard Devlin and Charles Ryan was victorious in Greenbelt, with Pitkin chalking up 3,570 votes, Devlin 3,422 and Ryan 3,413. In the legislative district they finished in the same order.

Topping their opponents in Greenbelt and the county were Democrats Arthur Marshall, Jr., State's Attorney; Norman Pritchett, Clerk of the Circuit Court, and James V. Aluisi, Sheriff. Democrats C. Philip Nichols, Jr., Steven Platt and Decatur Trotter were elected Judges of the Orphans Court as was Democrat Callie Mae Heffron, who was unopposed in her bid for Registrar of Wills.

Question K Fails

Controversial Question K, which would modify the TRIM amendment to the charter adopted in 1978 went down to defeat in the county. Greenbelt voters favored the amendment, 2,137 to 1,831. This was not enough to presage passage in the county. Generally, the Republican candidates for County Council opposed the amendment while Democratic candidates were not unanimous in their support.

Question E, authorizing issuance of general obligation bonds for six highway projects, including the extension of Hanover Parkway to Good Luck Road, was supported by voters in the county. The Greenbelt vote was 2,531 for passage, 597 against.

In the non-partisan election for School Board District 2, Lesley Kreimer was unopposed. The voters also gave the nod to John J. Bishop to continue in office as Judge, Court of Special Appeals (at large).

The turnout of 5,035 Greenbelt voters represents the highest percentage of registered voters (63.6%) casting ballots in an off-year election since 1966 when 76.1% of eligible voters trekked to the polls (see chart). However, due to the decrease in the number of registered voters, this is not the highest number of votes cast during this period.

Council Discusses Overpass Approaches

by Bill Rowland

What looked like a brief, straightforward agenda for the Greenbelt city council's regular meeting on October 25 somehow resulted in an evening that was, at best, disjointed. Despite much backing-and-forthing and a bit of outright bickering, little of note was completed. Unresolved problems relating to the nearly completed pedestrian overpass across the Baltimore - Washington Parkway were the prime example.

The city's Advisory Planning Board issued a report to council in which the board expressed its concern, now that the overpass is nearing completion, "about how overpass users will get to and from the overpass on either side." For the east side of the overpass, APB recommended that the city work with Greenbriar residents to have the areas on each side of the Greenbriar walk landscaped. This proposal brought forth a burst of outrage from Greenbriar resident Donald Shell.

Shell thanked the council, the city manager, and the public

Celebrate With Co-op

This autumn the city of Greenbelt has been celebrating the 45th anniversary of its founding. Tomorrow, November 5, the chain of cooperative food and furniture stores, gas stations and pharmacies which today we know as Greenbelt Cooperative, Inc. also celebrates a 45th anniversary. The two events are closely related.

Old-timers know the stories about the difficulties of doing food shopping when this town was first founded, miles away from established commercial districts. Few people owned cars in those Depression days, so those who did took to filling grocery lists for their car-less neighbors. Then they began to make extra purchases, selling off the excess produce out of their car trunks after they returned to Greenbelt. That was the beginning of the cooperative spirit that has so dominated this town.

GCI got its official start through a loan agreement in September 1937 between the U.S. Department of Agriculture, which had jurisdiction over Greenbelt, and Edward A. Filene, Boston merchant, philanthropist, and founder of consumer cooperatives. The Boston group, Consumer Distribution Corporation, loaned $50,000 to organize a subsidiary in Greenbelt, to be owned and operated by residents of the new Maryland town. Among cooperative services soon provided were a food store, a drug store, a beauty parlor, a variety store, and a tobacco shop. From that original beginning, housed in the store buildings of what we know as the Greenbelt Center, has grown the extended cooperative enterprise servicing many communities in the Washington metropolitan area and beyond.

The Co-op food store has operated continuously in the Center of Greenbelt since its founding 45 years ago. Moving from its original location (in the building now housing the dry cleaning establishment), it settled in 1949 into the larger supermarket facility that was constructed to the east of the mother-child statue on the mall. Even when that building had to be closed for rebuilding after a devastating fire, the Co-op continued to operate with supplies brought in from other branches and sold in two basement rooms under the burned out structure.

To local residents — especially for children, the elderly, young mothers — the Co-op has always been a convenient and friendly place to purchase top-quality food and other grocery items at reasonable prices, all within walking distance of their homes and apartments. It has been a place too where one could become active, if one chose, in governance of the cooperative. A few employees, working for decades in the local food store, have provided a kind of small-town continuity that makes the Co-op a pleasant and friendly place in which to shop.

These are special qualities generated from a simpler era. Yet the cooperative spirit in Greenbelt survives and is warmly cherished. If this store which still offers a cooperative philosophy also is to survive in a strongly competitive market situation, then Greenbelt residents must support it with their patronage and their dollars.

When this newspaper was first founded, it was called The Cooperator — to describe our method of organization and the philosophy of the community the paper then served. In 1954, to clarify its independence from the larger Greenbelt cooperative, the paper's name was changed to that under which we now operate. Last year, GCI asked for, and received, permission to utilize this paper's earlier title for its own membership newsletter. Though independent organizations, we have enjoyed friendly and mutually supportive relations over all these years in which both organizations have worked to serve this community.

Thus, on the occasion of GCI's 45th anniversary, we are happy to salute our sister organization — the Co-op.

A PLEA

To the Editor:

Greenbelters have a reputation for being very community-minded. Our sense of community is the envy of other cities. We have much to offer our people both culturally and spiritually.

Some of us have gone to great lengths and, at times, great financial risk to bring special events of the highest quality to our community. This is the basic reason we have brought the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra to Greenbelt.

Now, I feel it necessary to publish this appeal to my fellow Greenbelters. On November 10 at 8 p.m., the Baltimore Symphony will perform at the Eleanor Roosevelt High School Auditorium under the baton of the world-renowned conductor, Maestro Sergiu Comissiona. The scheduled program will be a delight for young and old. As a cultural event, the concert is worthy of support by the citizens of Greenbelt.

But beyond the tantalizing musical program is the fact that the concert is also a tribute to the Eleanor Roosevelt Symphony Orchestra which received great acclaim at the International Music Festival in Vienna, Austria, this past July.

The concert has been advertised widely in the area, but the advance ticket sales have been surprisingly poor. Ticket sales have not reached the numbers necessary to assure that the cost of the concert will be met. The auditorium holds 889 seats — a small auditorium by concert standards — but to bring a major symphony to our city costs thousands of dollars. Ticket prices have been set, not make a profit but to meet the costs. Are there 889 people in Greenbelt and vicinity who appreciate the musical opportunity being offered? Must one, two, three, or four of your fellow citizens carry the financial burden?

We appeal to you to buy tickets for the concert. We appeal to you to honor the young people of the Eleanor Roosevelt Symphony Orchestra and its fine Music Director, Dorothy Pickard. We appeal to you to demonstrate that Greenbelt believes in excellence.

Tickets may be purchased at the City of Greenbelt Finance Office Monday-Friday during regular business hours and at Twin Pines Office on Friday night from 5 to 8 p.m. and Saturday morning from 9 until 12 noon. Tickets may still be purchased by mail. Make checks payable to Greenbelt Arts Trust, Box 293, Greenbelt, Md. 20770.

No legitimate appeal to Greenbelters has ever been ignored. Let's meet at the concert for a great and unforgettable evening.

be found for the area north of Gardenway, until new sidewalks are built during the improvement of Ridge Road.

Giese told council that there have been no serious discussions yet with GHI about the pathway issue. He noted problems with either alternative suggested by APB for the south-of-Gardenway routing. One choice would have pedestrians walking through a parking lot, while the other would cut right through a long-established garden plot area.

Council asked that city staff come up with cost figures and a discussion of advantages and disadvantages for alternate routes before a formal approach to GHI and residents is made.

The Spellman Overpass?

The city manager reminded council that some time ago they had indicated their wish to have the new pedestrian overpass dedicated in honor of Gladys Noon Spellman. Giese said that the Federal Highway Administration had deferred to the National Park Service on the question of naming the overpass. The National Park Service in turn said it did not want to get involved because legislation to rename the Baltimore-Washington Parkway in honor of Spellman is still pending in the Congress. A spokesperson in Congressman Steny Hoyer's office advised that it would be best not to try to involve the Federal government in the naming of the overpass. The city could give the overpass a name if it wished, but would not be able to put a sign on the overpass itself.

Giese then recited a series of further difficulties, starting with expected opening of the bridge in early December, doubts that a plaque could be secured in time for a December dedication, and questions about what should go on the plaque—what is it to say, what members of which city council term should it list, by what name should it refer to the Parkway. . . .? Giese suggested that council might want to have only a ribbon-cutting ceremony in December.

Pilski stated flatly that he wants a plaque at the time of dedication, not later. He moved that the city proceed on naming of the overpass, with dedication on December 11 or 12 if Spellman's husband agrees.

to the previously required $10 fee for stock. Members with at least $25 in their Member Capital Account can obtain automobile insurance at a discount. Furthermore, the "Patronage Refund," which began during the first years at Co-op, was reinstated. The refund is made only to members, and the amount is based on total purchases of the consumer and the declared percentage of the patronage refund. Membership has doubled to 50,000 members since 1981.

"Two other developments, still in the experimental stage, have good potential for increasing membership and sales," said Rosenzweig. One is the "Cost Plus" store which opened in Severna Park, Md., last March. In this store all items on the shelves are marked at GCI's delivered cost, and a markup of 12.8 percent for members and 16 percent for non-members is added at the register. Another method, which is set up to serve the needs of people who have no co-op facility nearby, is POPS, a pre-order purchasing system which orders food on a computerized basis through a catalog. "Both systems," said Rosenzweig, "allow a 25 percent reduction in food costs."

The Personal Touch

In addition to these newly devised systems, Co-op distinguishes itself from other food stores by taking a personal interest in its consumer-members. The consumer concern now is nutrition, specifically the sugar and salt content of items for sale. In response to this consumer concern, Co-op began "labeling" its products (stating exact content), started merchandising cereals by placing high-level sugar cereals separate from those with low levels, and also introduced health foods to satisfy consumer desires. The Co-op was the first food permit for construction of the high-rise structure, meaning, he said, that "the cow is out of the barn" as far as any change in height is concerned.

—Selected the firm of Grimm and Parker to serve as architectural/engineering consultant to the city in eventual renovation of the North End School.

store in the area to put these merchandizing methods into effect, said Bruce Bowman, Secretary to the Board of Directors, and "it's a more honest system," he added.

The Co-op information center provides information on nutrition and on GCI cooperatives and membership by means of pamphlets and brochures. Co-op offers training courses to educate members on the principle of cooperatives. Package-deal travel — to New York City for example — is also offered through the Co-op. And about 10 times a year the Co-op publishes The Cooperator, a membership newsletter.

Longtime employee Irene Fulton said that Co-op serves as an information center in another way. "Lots of people call Co-op," she said, "to ask for other numbers because Co-op is easy to find in the phone book. The cashiers who answer the phones help them if they can." Fulton went on to say, "Customers often tell me how nice it is to shop in the Co-op store because of how different we operate from other grocery stores. We do special things for the customers like call them by their first names, if we know them, and let them know of a sale item or cheaper products if they don't realize what we have."

Looking Ahead

"Co-op has had an interesting and rough history," said Bowman, who maintains that the store is still "depressed" because of local competition. Bowman said that the GHI-owned Scan furniture stores have been GCI's financial supporters and that they enable Co-op food stores to endure.

But Richard King insists that "Co-op is not discussing closing its doors. Management feels that the Co-op is a necessary part of Greenbelt's heritage," said King. "We're working to make it go."

The Greenbelt Co-op will soon face another competitor. Memco is expected to open in the area soon. Can the Co-op store with the 'personal touch' survive another blow? Or will its special attention to consumers' needs differentiate it in the minds of shoppers and continue to draw on and extend their support?

The more things change . . .
The Co-op Service Station which operated between 1937 and 1956 contrasts with the sleek, modern lines of today's station on Southway.

. . . The more they stay the same.
Except for the hats, this picture of neighbors chatting 45 years ago in the forerunner of today's co-op store could be duplicated on any afternoon today.

GREENBELT COOPERATIVE ANNOUNCES 45th Anniversary In The Greenbelt Area!

A special Thank you to all our friends in the Greenbelt area for your support over the past 45 years.

INTEGRITY

Co-op: Quality you can trust!

A well-known consumer magazine recently advised that the best auto repair shop offers top quality, work properly performed on the first visit, and fair prices. We couldn't agree more.

That's why we've gone out of our way to insure honest, prompt, and reliable service at our Co-op Tire and Service Centers. We also believe that's why a recent survey of Washington area repair shops gave our Greenbelt station a top rating in both price and quality. And why 100 percent of all consumers interviewed for that survey termed our station's overall performance satisfactory or better.

With that same quality duplicated throughout our family of Metro-area stations, your car can't find a better friend than Co-op!

QUALITY

When Co-op gets a price break..

Breuer Chair

Take our SCAN stores, for example. For years, we've been selling popular Breuer dining chairs for nearly $20 below our competitors' prices. That's because we've stuck to our pro-consumer policies of avoiding middleman costs by direct factory purchases, and buying in significant quantities. Our costs were less, so we passed the savings on to you.

Recently, our Breuer chair prices dropped again - to almost $10. below their selling prices in SCAN stores a year ago. Since very favorable market conditions reduced our wholesale cost-per-chair, our price to you also decreased.

This is not a sale. Instead, it's a typical price adjustment based on our Co-op philosophy of passing on the savings to members and patrons. As long as our cost remain at this new, low level, our prices will, too.

ECONOMY

At Co-op, What's in our Stores is What Consumers Want There!

Looking for more meat for your dollar? Less fat for your health and figure? Our Co-op Supermarkets can help! In response to changes in consumer eating habits and demand for more healthful foods, our Co-op supermarkets now offer specially raised LEAN BEEF. From cows fed specifically to produce more lean meat and less fat, lean beef offers more usable yield in every pound. And it's great for dieters trying to restrict animal fat and calories it contains.

Co-op lean beef is now in our stores because consumers wanted it there. Just like bio-degradable detergents, reduced-price baby foods, see-through meat packaging, open code dating and unit pricing. All new developments pioneered by Co-op; all things to help you live better. From Co-op.

Visit our Greenbelt Coop Food Store located at 121 Centerway Road.

A special exhibit will be on display at the Greenbelt Coop Food stores tracing the history of Greenbelt Cooperative in the Greenbelt area.
