Council Is Excited by Innovative Proposal For Creativity in Redesign of the Center

by Andrea Edie

"It sounds like Christmas in February," said Mayor Gil Weidenfeld after hearing a proposal for a design project, called a "charette," to rehabilitate the commercial center. The charette would cost the city only hospitality expenses.

The proposal was submitted to the city council by Norene M. Yoch, vice president of the Greenbelt Arts Center, at the Feb. 25 city council meeting.

J. L. Sibley Jennings, a member of the American Institute of Architects, Richard Striner, president of the Art Deco Society of Washington; and Susan R. Frey, editor-in-chief of "Landscape Architecture Magazine," which is the official publication of the American Society of Landscape Architects (ASLA), were at the meeting to discuss and support the charette, a French term for an intense, rapid study of an area or design problem.

Jennings explained that the charette began in the court of Louis XIV with art, architecture and landscape architecture. Students were given an assignment to design a palace, gate or major shopping center and had to produce a "Parti," he said. A parti is a blueprint that is done quickly by students putting their thoughts down on paper, coming to a conclusion and making the design completely understandable. At the end of the appointed time limit, which might be from two hours to two days, a two-wheeled cart, called a charette, came down the middle of the drawing lab. The students had to stop where they were and put their work in the cart. The cart was then wheeled into the jury room, where a conclusion was reached on the final design, Jennings said.

"A modern day charette is like that, but without the cart," he said. Instead of students, design professionals voluntarily participate.

Jennings suggested a more intimate charette for Greenbelt than the one in which he is currently participating in Washington, where "we will literally be redesigning Washington based on L'Enfant's plans."

"Landscape architects, horticulturists, citizens groups, council members, the owner of the Center, shop keepers and anyone who is interested can get involved," he said, "and to an extent can work with and be a party to, the design professionals who will actually crank out the design solution."

"You can get a comprehensive master plan for the Center with all the guidelines and specifications you need," he told the council.

"We all benefit," said Yoch. "The city will benefit by the publicity and revitalization of the city. Citizens will have increased pride in the city. The developer and owner will benefit by individual businesses having more customers and, therefore, more money."

"The vision of new towns that the Roosevelt Administration had in 1937 is alive and well in Greenbelt," Susan R. Frey said. "What you do here is of national significance."

Possible Participants

Frey has contacted several people and groups who are very interested in becoming involved in the Greenbelt charette. Frey said that Dr. Henry M. Cathey, the director of the U.S. National Arboretum, would love to come. She quoted Cathey as saying he "would be happy to put the arboretum's influence behind this effort, perhaps even to supply plant materials."

Among others interested in participating are Melanie Moser, president of the Maryland chapter of the ASLA, and Rodney Mercer, who is with the national headquarters of the ASLA and the Potomac chapter of the ASLA. Joe Stowers, who is the planner of the 20th anniversary celebration of Reston's symposium on the future of Reston and other planned communities, is also interested.

"From a preservation standpoint, I think it would be very valuable to draw in additional help from Annapolis and the Maryland state historical society office," said Richard Striner.

"Some of the buildings in the Center belong to the national register district and may provide a tax incentive for the developer to rehabilitate the buildings," Striner said.

Any rehabilitation done on national register buildings has to meet the Secretary of Interior guidelines and the state office has to approve, he said. "Bringing them in at the earliest possible moment in an informal way just to get their feeling about it would be extremely valuable," he said, "and can save untold complications later on."

"You both sound like a godfather and a godmother," said Mayor pro tem Richard Pilski. "You've made us an offer we can't refuse."

A preliminary meeting to discuss the organizational aspects of the charette will be held soon, possibly March 7 or March 14. Anyone interested in participating should call Norene Yoch during the day at 682-8839.

Work Session Explores Improving the Center

by Eileen Peterson

At the February 20 City Council work session, 17 people crowded around the Council's table to urge that new sidewalks (an item on Council's agenda off and on since 1979) and an overall upgrading of the shopping center begin now and be finished in time for the 50th anniversary celebrations.

Most were there to support the continuation of the Arts Center, and Konrad Herling urged Council to publicly support its survival in light of its present status as an active theater center and its many plans for the future.

Richard Striner, president of the Art Deco Society of Washington and a strong voice in the Center School preservation fight, called Greenbelt "a special place" which needed historically sensitive treatment of its center so as to make it a magnet for people. He suggested a simple return to painted-white buildings with green awnings.

Sibley Jennings, the rehabilitation architect stressed that this is "one of the most important communities in the world" as a planned city, and he said he would like to help the community define what they wanted in their town center. Ruth Mathes, 18 Court Ridge Road, urged Council to move quickly, adding, "We need community pride." Impressed, various Council members expressed their commitment to meeting with center owner George Christacos to begin the upgrading process.

Herling Wins Jaycee Honor

Greenbelt Arts Center president Konrad Herling has been selected as one of the Jaycee's "Ten Outstanding Young Marylanders."

Herling, an industry analyst for the Federal Communications Commission, was nominated by the Greenbelt Jaycees for his work with the arts center.

Winners will be honored at a banquet on Saturday, March 16, at 6 p.m., at the Ramada Hotel in Lanham. For more information or to reserve banquet tickets, call Barb Barber at 441-1010.

Correction

Last week's city council story on the Smith-Ewing and Tidler tracts reported that Greenbelt resident Barry Schlesinger had addressed council on the zoning issues involved. Schlesinger has told the News Review that he was speaking as an individual, not as a representative of Citizens for Greenbelt as was stated in the story. The News Review regrets the error.

Former Councilman William Hoff Dies

William L. Hoff, 65, three times elected to Greenbelt's city council, named Greenbelt's Outstanding Citizen at the 1981 Labor Day Festival, a founder and 1984 president of the Parkinsonian Society of Greater Washington, long-time director of the University of Maryland Student Union, and a resident of Greenbelt for the last 35 years, died Feb. 22 at the National Institutes of Health (N.I.H.).

Bill was born in Cumberland and grew up there. During his high school years he played football and his first college experience, before World War II, was on a football scholarship to a West Virginia college. After Pearl Harbor his personal plans for his life, like those of a good many other young men, were interrupted by Greetings from Uncle Sam. The Army soon sent him to Officer Candidate School, where he got his gold bars. He was also sent to Ranger School, and was assigned to the 29th Division, 198 Infantry Regiment. His military career prospered until one day when a dynamite cap went off in his hand, necessitating hospitalization. Second Lieutenant Amelia Ann Inkerman was one of the ward nurses. Both decided without undue difficulty that they liked one another, and two months later they were married.

Certain problems connected with the wounded hand worried his doctors, and it was found that he had hemophilia, a disease in which blood is slow to clot. He was promptly removed from a combat unit and spent the rest of his military career stateside, becoming an instructor in marksmanship and a first lieutenant.

Back to College

Back in Maryland Bill returned to college under the G.I. Bill, attending the University of Maryland, where he majored in business education. The Hoff family also bought a house in Greenbelt, where their two daughters, Barbara and Carol, were born. Upon graduation he was asked to become manager of a small student recreation center housed in a lackluster little wooden building behind the dining hall at the University. The purpose of this center was to give students not affiliated with a sorority or fraternity some sort of social center and to sell needed school supplies. Bill had found his niche.

Under his management the center expanded, moving first to the basement of the Frances Scott Key Hall history building, and then in 1954 into a new, centrally located building. During these years he "had to use everything they taught him about business administration, and more besides," according to Ann Hoff. He remained as manager until health forced him to retire in 1974. By this time the Student Union had grown to include several food facilities, a large ballroom, lounges, meeting rooms, a large bookstore, a bowling alley, and even a bank. It had also expanded in size. Upon Bill's retirement the 750-seat theater was named for him.

During these years he was also active in Greenbelt affairs, culminating in his election to city council. He would have continued these activities longer but by this time was showing symptoms of Parkinson's disease.

It was typical of the man and his attitude toward community service that he volunteered to be a guinea pig for experimental programs with Parkinson's conducted by N.I.H., hoping that other people might benefit from his infirmity. Not merely content with this, he and Ann became much involved in support groups for Parkinson's victims. At the time of his death he was working to have specific training in caring for Parkinson's patients included in the curriculum for nurses' training.

"The Farm"

After his retirement the Hoff's spent their summers and many weekends on their 45-acre farm in Pennsylvania. In addition he interested himself in the Civil War, being not just a so-called Civil War buff but an expert, and

Nancy Fulton O'Reilly

Nancy Lee Fulton O'Reilly, a registered nurse at the Washington Hospital Center, succumbed to cancer on February 22.

Nancy was a lifetime resident of Greenbelt, except for brief residences in Winchester, Virginia and Salem, Oregon. She attended North End Elementary School, Greenbelt Junior High School and graduated from Parkdale High School in 1972. Prior to pursuing a career in nursing, Nancy was employed as a secretary at the Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt for three years.

She graduated with high honors from the nursing program at Prince Georges Community College in 1978 and was subsequently employed as a registered nurse at Prince Georges General Hospital, and Memorial Hospital in Salem, Oregon. Upon returning to Greenbelt, she continued her nursing career at the Washington Hospital Center on the Oncology Unit.

Nancy's two sons were born at home with the assistance of nurse midwives, and her husband, and friends. Her interest in women's health was demonstrated by her volunteer work with Planned Parenthood of Prince Georges County and her formation of the local chapter of the Childbirth Education Association in Winchester, Virginia.

Nancy's survivors include her husband, James O'Reilly; two young sons, Jesse, who is in kindergarten at Greenbelt Center School, and Conor, seven months old; her mother, Irene Fulton, and her brother, Joe Fulton of Greenbelt, and sister, Linda Chaney, of Bryantown, Maryland, and brother John Fulton of Portland, Oregon.

Volunteers Needed

Prince Georges County Department of Social Services needs volunteers to work in its appointment center.

Volunteers are needed especially on Mondays or Wednesdays. The work consists of answering phones and assisting people needing food stamps and/or Medicaid appointments.

The volunteers work at the appointment center located in the First United Methodist Church in Hyattsville.

Anyone who enjoys helping people should call 779-5970 and ask for Pat or Jo. Volunteers can choose their own day—Monday through Friday.

This is a Community Ministry/Department of Social Services program.

William L. Hoff

then became interested in World War I, becoming almost as expert on that as on the Civil War. He of course continued his interest in Greenbelt affairs.

The public man, William L. Hoff, used his talents for the common good. But the private man, Bill Hoff, also used his talents well. The Hoff home was always pleasant to visit, seeming to ring with laughter, and it made one feel good just to visit. His death was caused by an infection complicated by his hemophilia following tooth extraction.

Katherine Keene

Dorothy McGlynn

Dorothy McGlynn, former Greenbelt resident, died on February 20 at the age of 81, at Sylvan Manor Health Care Center in Silver Spring. Her burial on February 22 was in Gate of Heaven Cemetery.

Mrs. McGlynn, with her late husband Edward, lived in the 6 Court of Plateau Place from about 1957 until his death in 1983. They were members of St. Hugh's Catholic Church.

The McGlynn's had no children.

Anna Beveridge

Anna Marie D. Beveridge, 73, of College Park died February 18 of cancer. Mrs. Beveridge taught English and business education at Greenbelt High School and was vice-principal at DuVal High School before becoming an administrative assistant at the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center.

Flea Market Big Hit

Despite bitterly cold winds, hundreds found bargains and many sipped hot coffee or chocolate as 12 Greenbelt organizations held a flea market in the Youth Center on February 9.

Conceived by Ann Pisano as a mid-winter diversion from the cold, the event proved a happy bringing together of diverse groups in a neighborhood activity that provided laughter, gossip and plenty of new friendships as well as the inevitable profits for each group treasurer.

Jose Morales, president of the Springhill Lake Civic Association, organized one of the tables. It was a special handclasp across that barrier—the Beltway—that drew comments from market visitors. Other civic groups outside the Old Greenbelt core were not able to arrange their schedules to attend, but Greenbriar contributed to publicity costs and vowed to come next year. The success of the February market fuels hope that this will become an annual event.

Cultural Program Planned

The ways in which cultural conditioning hinders understanding between women of different ethnic backgrounds will be explored in a county-wide workshop on March 9. Billed as a coming together of women of all races, "Building Bridges: Who Said It Would Be Simple?" was planned in part by Greenbelters Virginia Beauchamp and Suzanne Plogman, chair of the Prince Georges County Commission for Women.

Registration for the program will begin at 8:30 a.m., Saturday, March 9, at the Prince Georges Community College. Following a panel discussion at 9 a.m., participants will break into small groups for discussions under leaders trained in multicultural differences. The program will conclude at 2 p.m. Participants may bring brown bag lunches or purchase food at the college snack bar.

The Building Bridges workshop is co-sponsored by the Commission for Women, the community college, and the Women's Action Coalition, whose membership is drawn from a wide variety of women's groups and organizations in the county.

For further information, or to pre-register, call 952-3383. Their is a minimal registration fee.

Letters to the Editor

Shut Out

To the Editor:

As a lifelong Greenbelt resident and a young professional soon to be seeking my own home, I'd like to speak out against the "family only" rule governing GHI membership. My initial inclination is to locate my own apartment or house in Greenbelt to live in. However, the current guidelines not only discourage my (purchase of a GHI house)—they prohibit it.

According to the guidelines discussed in the February 21 article, I could not rent or buy a GHI house unless I were to move in with a member of my family or get married. (I cannot afford to live alone.) I'm not ready for marriage and, although I love them dearly, I am trying to strike a life independent from my family on a daily basis.

The implications from the rules are that a) if I am to have a roommate of the opposite sex, we would be partaking in immoral, sinful activities, and b) if I were to avoid the above listed ramifications by having a same-sex roommate, we would be suspected of being members of Prince Georges County's "extremely large homosexual community," in the words of pastor Mike Connolly.

My, my, what have we here? A community of families in which there are no individuals. Surely it is unsafe for a young woman to live alone (also prohibited by the standards), yet if I want to live with anyone, I must marry first or be accused of poor moral judgment.

I am shocked at the logic behind the guidelines and disgusted at the supporters' comments and implications. I'm also surprised that GHI allows siblings to be roommates. Following their inane logic, I'm surprised that GHI supporters haven't decided that sibling roommates engage in incest.

Well, I suppose that when it comes time for me to establish my own home, I'll have one less choice to consider. I certainly don't want to reside under moronic management.

Both Sides of a Story

To the Editor:

It appears that the News Review is attempting to keep up with the Prince George's Journal and several local news programs. What ever happened to reporting both sides of a story? I am referring to an article in the February 14 edition entitled, "Finding of Not Guilty in Child Abuse Case." I see that the State's Attorney was quoted, but not Mr. Jova's. As a matter of fact, there does not seem to be any evidence of the News Review trying to speak to Mr. Jova, or his attorneys regarding this incident.

I know that many children in this country are sexually abused and we should thank the media for shedding light on an overlooked problem. Unfortunately, some things can be carried too far and "responsible" journalists can make matters worse. The News Review has no evidence that the child "froze" on the stand, or that Angel Jova abused that child. Consider the other people you are harming by printing these one-sided stories; Mr. Jova, his family, and the employees of Early Learning, especially those at Greenbriar. I hope that from now on, the whole story will be reported in the News Review.

Patricia Bowen-Neiswender

Editor's Note: The News Review article did not say, or imply, that Jova had committed child abuse, but instead reported that he had been found not guilty of such a charge.

The statement that the child "froze" was a direct quote given to the News Review by Assistant State's Attorney William Missouri, and attributed to him in the article.

Joe Pastori, attorney for Jova, has told the News Review that "In my opinion, the child did not freeze. He told the truth. . ."

THANKS

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter to express my appreciation to all those people who came to the reception to honor my retirement on January 31. Horticulture has been a very satisfying field for me, and I am pleased to have served Greenbelt as Parks Superintendent for the past 13 years.

Capital Office Park Gears Up For Start of Fifth Building

by Mary Lou Williamson

The fifth office building in Capital Office Park should be constructed and ready for occupancy within the next year. Construction of Building 6 will depend on marketing. Developers Springhill Lake Associates plan a glass exterior for the newest group of buildings — a change of pace from the first four, though the groups are designed to harmonize with each other.

Attorney for the developers Nancy Slepicka appeared before the city council at its January 28 meeting to respond to recommendations of the city's Advisory Planning Board and to answer any questions council might raise as it reviewed the site plan. She accepted both APB recommendations: (1) requiring that walkways be added to connect with the group of buildings across the street, and (2) sign plan review by the city. Reluctant at first to grant sign review, Slepicka later agreed when Mayor Gil Weidenfeld remarked that "The city would like the opportunity to comment on the sign even if it does not have approval authority." City Manager James K. Giese explained that while the city at times through a special agreement or covenant may have sign review, the final authority lies with Park and Planning.

Building 5 will be eight stories with 173,800 sq. ft. of floor space. Building 6, with 10 stories, will add another 218,000 sq. ft. of office space. Lying to the north of Ivy Lane, the building site occupies 19.5 acres. The two buildings will sit close together in the center of the site sharing a common plaza with parking on both sides. Parking areas will be entered from Ivy Lane, though access may be provided later from Cherrywood Lane for Building 6, if needed. Both parking and green space planned are well in excess of county requirements. A number of walkways will be provided in the parking areas.

Members of council Toni Bram and Tom White expressed concern about the traffic impact at a time when drivers will already be facing the two-year construction of the interchange at Kenilworth Avenue and Greenbelt Road. The fifth building will open in the midst of that construction.

"I thought council asked that your building plans be phased in so that completion would not occur until after the interchange

Martin Marietta Data Systems has announced the appointment of three divisional vice presidents. They will head primary organizational components of the Martin Marietta Corporation's worldwide information services company, which operates in part from quarters in Greenbelt's Capital Office Park.

Shirley F. Prutch has been named vice president and general manager of the Data Systems company's systems integration division, which designs and operates large-scale computer systems for government agencies, business operations, and institutional customers including hospitals and universities. Prutch is headquartered in Greenbelt.

Dr. Kenneth F. Hoffman succeeds Prutch as vice president and general manager of the company's accounts division. The division provides diverse data processing support for other Martin Marietta Corporation units in areas of business operations, finance, engineering, and management.

William A. Morrill becomes vice president and general manager of the Data Systems company's newly established Mathematics Consulting and Research division. The division offers operations research, and analysis, and management science to government, among other services.

is finished?" asked White. Slepicka reminded council that traffic studies they have done show most traffic exiting Capital Office Park enters the Beltway and only a small portion travels south as far as Greenbelt Road. A few cars travel north on Edmonston Road. Asked if the opening of Building 6 could be delayed until construction of the interchange is completed, Slepicka demurred, saying only, "At this time we are not anticipating starting Building 6."

"How is the helicopter pad coming?" asked councilmember Richard Pilski, who is concerned about "fire and safety. These will be very tall buildings." Slepicka responded that plans for the next buildings will include a helipad, but pointed out that some residents have already expressed concern about the potential noise of helicopters. She will return to council shortly to seek needed rezoning for the 22 acre tract.

Hoyer Talks to the Issues

by Betsy Likowski

Congressman Steny Hoyer answered questions from a standing-room-only crowd in the Greenbelt City Council chambers on January 29. Hoyer discussed three issues of interest to Greenbelters and answered questions about national issues.

Congressman Hoyer assured his audience that the Green Line of the subway will be built to Greenbelt. He said he has done much work on this issue during the last two years and will keep working on it.

On the issue of repairing the Baltimore-Washington Parkway, Hoyer said that $100 million will be needed for the job, of which $70 million has been authorized.

On issues concerning the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center (BARC), Hoyer said the parcel of land that was given to the State Department will have a buffer zone of foliage around it so it will have minimum impact on surrounding BARC acreage.

After discussing local issues, Hoyer gave a short preview of the two main issues that will be taken up by Congress during this session: the budget and arms control.

Hoyer then answered specific questions submitted in writing from the audience. When asked about the 5% pay cut proposed for federal workers, Hoyer informed his audience he was very opposed to it and doubted it would happen. He also said he thought any substantial change of federal retirement system would not be passed by Congress this year. When asked if any tax reforms were likely to be passed in this session of Congress, Hoyer expressed doubts that any would unless the President used much of his clout to push the issue.

There were several questions asked on defense-related issues. Hoyer said he has not been too supportive of the "Star Wars" system, and is not certain it would work. He supports the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty.

When asked about his views on investment in South Africa, Hoyer told how he has been working on the issue of reducing American investment in South Africa for years.

A further question relating to foreign relations was on American responsibilities in Latin America. Hoyer stated he supports the Caribbean basin plan, supports additional economic aid to Central and South America, but opposes aid to the contras.

Greenbelt CARES

CARES director Carol Leventhal attended a meeting of health care providers at the Mental Health Association offices in Riverdale. There was a continuation of a discussion begun in December on adolescent suicide. Since November of this year, there have been five known suicides among adolescents in the county.

Paul Fischetti met with members of the Stayin' Alive Committee at Eleanor Roosevelt High School recently. Members became acquainted with the guidance counselors at the school and talked about current alcohol and drug abuse problems in the community. Fischetti also went to an executive board meeting of the Human Services Coalition where the role of the county government in the provision of shelter for the county's homeless was discussed.

In January, an average week's counseling activities at CARES was 45 individuals, 19 of whom were under 18. This comprised 27 family units.

Tips on Control of Gypsy Moths by Firewood Buyers

The Maryland Department of Agriculture is asking users of firewood to help stop the spread of gypsy moths by looking out for their egg masses on the wood they buy. The insect, which has defoliated hundreds of thousands of acres in the northeastern United States, has in recent years become a serious problem in Maryland.

Egg masses are velvety, buff colored mounds approximately 1 1/2 inches in length that can be unwittingly transported on firewood. Dr. Douglas Kolodny-Hirsch of the MDA says that this is one of the most common ways of introducing gypsy moths into a community and, once introduced, they are difficult to eradicate. He suggests a few ways for citizens to help in preventing further infestation.

People buying firewood should ask the seller to provide from the agriculture department in the state where the wood was cut a certificate verifying that the wood is free from gypsy moths. If the wood has been delivered and used this winter, the eggs will be destroyed when the logs are burned. However, before the eggs hatch in mid-April, check the remaining wood, scrape off any egg masses with a putty knife. Drop the egg masses into a paper bag and burn them completely. Other methods for destroying the eggs include burying them under several inches of well packed earth or soaking them overnight in rubbing alcohol, kerosene, gasoline or bleach. Keep in mind that eggs that simply fall to the ground are not killed and may still hatch.

Possible Uses of GHI Boiler Rooms Outlined for Board Consideration

by Sandra Surber Smith

Storage and laundry rooms, a community center and new homes were some of the uses proposed for the no-longer-needed boiler rooms, which were suggested at the Greenbelt Homes, Inc. board of directors meeting on February 14. Responding to a member survey that indicated interest in seeing the boiler rooms put to new use, GHI management had developed several preliminary proposals, which they presented to the board for discussion. Also up for discussion at this meeting were fireplace regulations, and a moisture survey update.

Boiler Rooms

Jay Freedman, Superintendent, Contract Processing and Technical Services, presented a proposal to turn boiler room #24, a free-standing structure on Laurel Hill Road, into a community room. For an estimated cost of $73,000 a facility could be built with a large community room with raised, tiled concrete floor, insulated drop ceiling and paneled walls, entrance foyer with coat room, reception area, small private room, kitchenette with sink and refrigerator, two handicapped access toilets, drinking fountain, folding seating and tables and other fixtures and accessories.

The community room would be a multi-purpose facility with occupancy for approximately 50 people. It could be used for meetings, receptions, parties and other events. Margaret Høgenesen, president of the board of directors, commented that the cost of creating this type of facility might never be recouped from charges for its use.

Board member Wayne Williams suggested a "wait and see" approach, depending on the decision made by city council on the use of North End School. GHI Manager Ron Colton reminded the board that there would also be costs to board up or demolish the boiler rooms, which also must be considered.

The board then moved on to other possible uses—storage and laundry room proposals. Because the boiler rooms are typically cut into the side of the hill and have access from two distinct levels, it was decided that the two uses—storage and laundry—could be combined. For a cost of about $45,000, a facility with storage bins downstairs and leased, coin-operated washers and dryers upstairs could be built, which could pay for itself in about 10-12 years. Storage bins on the lower level could be rented for $10-12 per month, considerably less than private facilities. Access would be limited to GHI members, who would pay a nominal "key fee." If the Board recommends approval of this alternative and the membership supports it, management recommended that boiler room #22, located at the lower end of Laurel Hill, could be used for this purpose. Storage and laundry facilities could also be built in the attached boiler rooms. Storage would be particularly desirable in those courts which have all-frame units or a mixture of frame and block, since these two types are especially short of storage space.

The third possible use for both free-standing and attached boiler rooms is additional housing. Management had another detailed proposal and cost estimate for this approach. A plan to create three two-bedroom units in a free-standing boiler room was outlined. Total construction costs were estimated at around $164,682.

Smaller units were proposed for the attached boiler rooms. It was estimated that an efficiency apartment could be constructed for about $17,000. Management thanked staff for the detailed proposals for conversion of the boiler rooms. Further discussion will take place before final recommendations from the Board are presented to the membership for approval.

Fireplace Regulations

Management presented proposed fireplace regulations. Fireplace regulations mandate height, placement, and materials of the fireplaces and chimneys. They also call for an annual cleaning of the chimney by a professional service. Both the Aesthetics and Environment Committee and the Buildings and Grounds Committee had reviewed the regulations and had some additional suggestions. The board directed management to include committee comments and resubmit to the board at a later meeting.

Moisture Survey

Staff provided an update on the moisture problem still present in some units. As of February 13, 350 moisture survey forms had been returned, with 206 units reporting moisture problems, including 80 brick units, 121 block homes, and the five free-standing homes. No moisture problem was reported by 111 brick homes and 33 block units. Staff is responding to the moisture and mildew problems in GHI units in three ways: (1) maintaining and monitoring the mechanical and passive ventilation systems, (2) installation of passive air vents through the roofs of the block units and (3) analysis of the 1983 and 1984 surveys to identify and further define the problem. Maureen Osborne and Jim Garvey will be visiting units in target rows to gain additional information on the causes of the moisture and develop solutions on an individual basis.

Other Matters

The Board approved a $50 contribution to the Greenbelt Cultural Arts Center and requested more information about the Prince Georges County Beautif-

Crime Prevention Corner

by Marcia Heimberger

The Greenbelt Crime Prevention Committee held a public forum on February 19 to discuss alleged crime and harassment problems occurring at the Roosevelt Center Mall and Shopping Center area. The forum was sponsored following citizen complaints to city council. Council, in turn, asked the committee to investigate the problem and report appropriate recommendations.

Konrad Herling of the Utopia Theater stated that he feels there is an "unsafe environment" at the Center. He has witnessed verbal harassment, retrieved a knife from a 10- or 11-year-old child, and was present when a window of the theater was shot and broken by a BB or air gun. He said that these incidents have taken place over approximately a two-year period.

Mike Burchick, representing the Co-op grocery store, cited three incidents of broken windows at the store, shoplifting on a weekly basis, consumption of alcoholic beverages in the mall, and a breaking and entering of the store.

Comments from several other speakers included complaints about littering, radios being played at excessive volumes, riding of bicycles through the mall area, and the public consumption of alcoholic beverages by minors and young adults. A number of people highly praised Chief Frank Hutson, the Police Department, and their response time to calls.

A group of teenagers who attended the forum complained that the problems caused at the Center are not by "all teenagers, just a small group" and that "some of the troublemakers are older . . . in their early 20's."

Chairman Brown asked for suggestions from the audience and committee about how to correct the problems at the Center. The suggestions included increased lighting, more foot patrols by the Greenbelt police, stricter enforcement of the litter ordinance, hiring a private security guard during evening hours, and organizing a business crime watch.

Chief Hutson pointed out that the Center receives more foot patrol coverage — about three hours daily — than any of the other shopping centers in the area. A shortage of police personnel precludes additional patrols for the Center. He suggested that the merchants seriously consider hiring a security guard, but the suggestion was questioned by Konrad Herling who said that hiring a guard would "take too long . . . at least six weeks."

Training sessions, held in various locations around the city, are intended to raise citizen awareness about crime, what to watch for, and how to go about organizing a Crime Watch Committee.

The next meeting of the Crime Prevention Committee is scheduled for Friday, March 15 at 7 p.m., in the Municipal Building and will include consideration of recommendations to be submitted to council. The meeting will be open to Greenbelt residents.

Weidenfeld Elected Vice-Chair of COG

Mayor Gil Weidenfeld was recently elected Vice-Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Washington Council of Government (COG). COG is the regional planning body for the District of Columbia, most of the county governments and many municipalities in the Washington area.

Mayor Weidenfeld, who has been a member of the Board of Directors of COG for six years, was elected and served as Secretary-Treasurer during 1984.

Project Share Grows In County

Nearly two-thirds of the parents with elementary-aged children in the Prince Georges County Public Schools pledged their support this year for the unique homework program, Project SHARE.

Project SHARE (School and Home Accepting Responsibility for Education), which began in 1980, is aimed at improving student achievement through greater involvement and motivation by parents. As part of the program, parents pledge to spend at least one-half hour four nights a week helping their children read or study.

Systemwide, 62 percent of the parents or guardians of the school system's 50,275 elementary school students joined the program. Current membership of 31,332 parents in the project represents a 17 percent increase over last year's response.

Deputy Administrator of the Federal Agency for International Development (AID), Jay F. Morris of Adelphi, was the guest speaker at the Annual Lincoln Day Dinner of the Republican Party of Prince Georges County at La Fontaine Bleu on February 8.

Well known to many in Greenbelt, Morris started his government career as research and legislative assistant to Senator James Pearson (R-Kansas) in 1967. Following this he served as Senior Administrative Assistant to County Executive William Gullett of Prince Georges County from 1971 to 1974. In this capacity, he helped install and manage the new home-rule government adopted by the county in a 1970 referendum in which he, as Campaign Manager of Citizens for Charter, was one of the leaders. As President of the County Young Republicans in the sixties he was a familiar figure at their Greenbelt Labor Day Festival Booth.

Nominated for the AID position by President Reagan in August 1982 and unanimously confirmed by the Senate, Morris is the chief operating officer of a 6-billion-dollar operation active in nearly 90 countries around the world. During the Ford administration, he was Executive Director of the President's Commission on Personnel Interchange.

Virginia Kellogg of Mitchellville, President of the Central Republican Women's Club, was the winner of the Robert A. Yost Award.

Among the winners of the 1984 "Tops Award" for Area Chairmen was Eunice E. Coxon of Greenbelt, who was awarded the same plaque in 1980 for "Outstanding Service to the Precinct Organization."

Among the nearly four hundred attending the affair were Greenbelters Michael Burchick, John Churchill, Eunice E. Coxon, Joseph Long III, Elizabeth Maffay, Howard Mortman, J. Laurence Noel, Jr., Lois Todd, and Alan Virta.

What's the best way to brush? There are several accepted techniques for proper brushing. What's right for you is best determined by your dentist. The common factor to all methods is thoroughness and regularity. It is especially important to clean the mouth completely before going to sleep. This is the time that the bacteria that cause dental disease are most active.

Proper brushing is only half of a total program of good oral hygiene. Daily use of dental floss is necessary to reach those areas missed by the toothbrush.

Officials and Citizens Tour North End School to Study Possible Uses

by Sandra Barnes

Touring the North End Elementary School is like a venture into the past. So many memories. I can still see my young son bravely and fearfully walking off to kindergarten and I can still feel that special twinge of relief and sadness. I remember voting here year after year in the school's multipurpose room. I remember play school in the summers, and Christmas, Halloween and birthday parties.

Now the school is empty. It is cold, as no heat can circulate through the broken pipes from the broken boiler. Glass is strewn in shattered piles in a few second-floor rooms. Some rooms reek with mold from the water damage sustained from frequent flooding and bursting pipes. But in the hush you might still hear the chatter of young voices.

Many rooms still retain their character. Cartoon images look freshly painted on the walls—Goofy holding a fistful of balloons. A blue toad features the inscription, "I toadily like North End."

North End is a building in two parts. One, the older two-story section, was constructed by the federal government in 1945 to accommodate the children of the 1000 defense families moving into their frame homes in 1941-42. The second part is the one-story wing built in 1962. In considering what to do about the structure—tear it down or fix it up—members of the Greenbelt city council met on a frigid Saturday morning, January 26, with interested citizens, members of the city's Park and Recreation Advisory Board, and members of the Greenbelt Museum Committee. Also along on the tour was Steve Parker of the architectural firm of Grimm and Parker, who would show schematic drawings for possible re-use of the school.

City Manager James Giese set the tone for the tour when he reminded those present that the building is large, with about 41,700 square feet, and will be expensive to operate. "It will be a considerable drain on the city coffers unless we come up with uses." But, he reminded everyone, zoning laws do not permit commercial use in this residential area, and provisions for adequate parking in accordance with county codes will use up considerable green space.

And so the group set off to visit classrooms, storage rooms and bathrooms. Structurally, the building seemed to be in fairly good shape, with some areas of notable exception—those former kindergarten and first-grade rooms heavily damaged by water and mold. After the tour, the group huddled together and tried not to think of the cold air blowing on them from an ancient heater. Steve Parker then outlined some of the alternative uses.

Possible Uses

Most of the intended uses so far proposed, Parker stated, fit into the "new" wing of the building. The multipurpose room could be used for gymnastics, a senior center, a youth drop-in center, pre-school and the museum would also easily fit into this area, he said. Parker proposed demolition of the two-story elder wing because of the high cost of renovation. He cited the need to bring the building up to fire code standards and the need for an elevator to make it accessible to the handicapped as just two of the costly renovations.

Considerable discussion centered around construction of an indoor swimming pool, either in the old section, using only the exterior walls and gutting the interior, or as a separate addition to the newer section. It was estimated that construction of a pool would cost approximately $1 million dollars.

Another problem centered on parking. According to county codes, the renovated facility without the old wing would require 197 parking spaces. The reason so many spaces are required is that the county establishes the number of parking spaces based on the full utilization of each of the rooms at one time. The city considers utilization of all rooms at one time unlikely, and would hope to seek a variance on the parking requirements.

The museum committee worried about whether the space allotted to it was appropriate for its needs, whether it would be available by 1987 during the city's 50th anniversary, and whether trying to purchase a GHI duplex unit from the outset would be preferable.

Swimming pool enthusiasts worried that the cost of the pool might knock out consideration of its construction, at least in the school complex. Knowledgeable sources, including recreation director Hank Irving, reported that indoor pools across the state almost always operate at a deficit.

Because deed restrictions prevent the city from earning a profit from rental of space at the school, some people suggested tearing the whole facility down and either using the property as parkland or erecting a new building on the site. Parker estimated that a new building, designed to meet the requirements of all the proposed uses, could be constructed for approximately $1 1/2 million. Rehabilitation of the existing building, should it occur, would take approximately one year to complete at an estimated cost of $700,000, according to City Manager Giese.

The issue of North End School will be up for continuing discussion over the next several months. It is expected to be included in the city's capital improvement bond issue, to go before the voters in the spring.

Fuel Fund Needs Donors

As a Christmas donation, Washington Gas has contributed $100,000 to the Washington Area Fuel Fund (WAFF). The fund is used to supplement government energy assistance programs for low-income residents. Contributions to WAFF are already approaching last season's total of $522,000, but the gas company says funds are badly needed. More than 7,000 persons were helped by WAFF last season, a figure expected to grow this winter.

The gas company sponsors WAFF in cooperation with WMAL-AM and WDVM-TV. The Salvation Army administers the program throughout the metropolitan area. Eligible persons may be helped by WAFF regardless of whether they heat with oil, gas, electricity, coal or wood.

To qualify for assistance from WAFF, applicants must first have exhausted available funds from other programs or be ineligible for aid under those programs. Local Salvation Army centers began taking applications for assistance beginning January 2. Applicants should call first for an appointment.

Contributions to WAFF are tax-deductible and may be mailed to P.O. Box 1999, Washington, D.C. 20013.
