To Split too Small a Pie or to Ask For More, Puts Council in Dilemma

by Mavis Fletcher

The City Council worksession on June 11 dealing with priorities for the expenditure for the proceeds of the bond issue was a contentious meeting where the divisions in the council were made more obvious than before. In some ways resembling another public hearing, rather than a worksession, it was attended by about 10 persons who gave council members the benefit of their opinions.

Councilman Joseph Isaacs opened the meeting with the strong recommendation that a referendum for a supplemental bond issue be included on the ballot for the September 15 city election. He said that he endorsed the priority listing which had been arrived at through the strategic planning process for the $6 million bond issue already authorized (see pg. 6); however, he said that many other worthwhile projects would be left out and might be postponed indefinitely without additional money.

Isaacs advocated asking voters to authorize enough additional money not only for the indoor swimming pool but for other projects publicized during the campaign for the previous bond referendum. These projects included such building projects as an addition to the Youth Center, renovation of North End School, renovation of the space in the Municipal Building to be vacated by the police department when the new police station is finished. Projects relating to parks included improvements to Schrom Hills Park, the dredging and upkeep at Greenbelt Lake, construction of Northway Fields, acquisition of the 72-acre former school board property now owned by the county, pedestrian and bicycle trails, and acquisition of additional park land to serve Greenbelt East.

City Manager James K. Giese said that current estimates of the cost of the full list of projects considered by the strategic planning groups would total about $10.4 million, that is, about $4 million more than the money now available ($6 million bond issue and some $493,000 in building reserves).

When Council member Edward Putens asked Giese what the impact on the tax rate of a $3 million bond issue would be, Giese replied that a tax increase of about seven cents would be needed to pay for such a bond issue. Putens said emphatically that he "didn't want to go through this same thing again." Over and over he demanded from Isaacs an exact statement of what he would put on the list for another bond referendum. Vehemently Putens pointed out that the council could find themselves in the same uncomfortable position with a second list. If estimates proved to be too low, the council would be faced with cutting items from the list and proponents of those projects would be as disappointed as are the partisans now of threatened projects.

Isaacs, who at one point demanded that Putens stop raising his voice at him, stuck to his position that council should be above-board with the voters, admit that the first bond issue had been too small and ask for more

Chief Craze Discusses Changes For Self and for Department

by Steve Galanis

Since his leadership of the city police department was made official last February, 38-year-old James Craze has been all over Greenbelt; Springhill Lake, Greenbriar and other neighborhoods with crime prevention programs as an important part of the new chief's regular tour of Greenbelt.

In describing his transition during an interview, Craze said that his promotion from within the department has made personnel decisions in disciplinary situations tougher, but that overall coming up through the ranks has been a positive factor. Craze said his 16-year experience as a Greenbelt officer has taught him a lot about the city's workings as well as its particular crime patterns. He said coming up through the department's ranks has also helped him identify the strengths and weaknesses of his co-workers, and assign them to appropriate positions.

Craze said his toughest responsibility as a police chief is making personnel decisions, as his authority extends over people's careers.

"It would be easier for somebody to come in from another police department and just sit here, and if a disciplinary situation comes up read what happened and make a decision," he said.

Although Craze said knowing the officers under him as well as he does makes disciplinary de-isions more difficult, facts about their personal lives help him make better decisions, he said.

"I think with the knowledge that I have, I make harder but better decisions on what to do in disciplinary situations," he said.

Becoming a public figure, Craze emphasized, has been the toughest part of his new position.

"It's not the job that has caused me any anguish; it's the limelight," he said. "I'm a very private or heretofore have been a very private individual."

Although he likes people, Craze said public speaking was never something he desired to do before taking the job. Aside from helping him overcome his fear of the limelight, speaking in public has provided Craze the opportunity to inform people of important public safety skills such as maintaining awareness when victimized by crime.

"I see myself as a conduit for passing on information to the public," he said. According to Craze, educating the public to become better witnesses is crucial to making crime tough on the criminal.

"Things like that lead to more

Three Greenbelt Residents Become Published Authors

by Sandra Barnes

In a time of celebration for Greenbelt's 50th Anniversary, as well as for the News Review, the city is honored to have three long-time residents become published authors this year. Virginia Beauchamp, Bernice Kastner and Dorothy Sucher not only have lived in Greenbelt for more than 25 years, but also are good friends who happened to have spent many years together on the News Review staff. Beauchamp continues to write and edit copy for the local paper.

Virginia Beauchamp is an Associate Professor of English at the University of Maryland. She has edited A Private War: Letters and Diaries of Madge Preston, 1862-1867, which has just been published by Rutgers University Press and will be released June 26.

The book is both history and literature, revealing the period of the Civil War and its effect on the lives of a prominent Baltimore family, the Prestons. William Preston was a criminal lawyer, a slave holder, a property owner, a Democrat and a quiet supporter of the Confederacy. Madge, his wife, was a woman of class who maintained the family's city and country homes.

Through Madge's letters, primarily to her daughter May, who was a student at St. Joseph's Academy in Emmittsburg, Md., Madge portrayed the entertaining and serene aspect of her daily life. Through her diaries, however, we know that Madge was a battered wife whose life was filled with fear and brutality. Madge's diaries, Beauchamp writes, were "her strategy for coping with her humiliating secret."

According to Beauchamp, wife beating was not uncommon for this period, but divorce was unthinkable. Women of Madge's station often turned their creative energies to letters and diaries both as an outlet for their

Take It to the Voters

Hurrah for the News Review: that was a terrific editorial in last week's issue! For those unlikely readers who may have missed it: the title is "Second Sellout?" and it characterizes the strategic planning group's proposed reduction of bond monies for park land from the voter-approved $2 million to $750,000 as a "breach of faith with the voters who approved the bond issue."

Unfortunately, during last week's work session on priorities, council did not give the impression of wanting to stick to the 2-2-2 division of monies. In contrast, several citizens attending the meeting pointed to the moral obligation to adhere to the voters' decision. And Council Member Tom White, while absent due to a death in the family, listed in a written statement adherence to the 2-2-2 division as an essential guiding principle.

Interestingly, the solution is so simple, if one just looks at what was voted for and what was not voted for. The voters agreed upon $2,000,000 for parkland. That is done and over with, and does not have to be put again to a vote, referendum, or whatever else. On the other hand, the voters never agreed to spend $3,175,000 on swimming pools, for the simple reason that this figure was not known until early March. It was impossible to contact all voters. But no longer. All council has to do on June 29 is to set the priorities roughly within the 2-2-2 categories, then go to the voters in September, during the elections, with the question whether or not they want to spend an additional $1,175,000 on pools. September is less than three months away from June 29. It is worthwhile waiting that short time in order to give all voters the opportunity to express their preference.

I gladly live by the verdict of the majority, the 51% plus. That is democracy. But I do not, repeat not, want to live by whatever special interest groups of 100 to 200 persons with their urgencies and their emotions cajole three out of five members of council into deciding. That, my friends, is not democracy. For some, relatively unimportant subjects, it may be the only way to come to a decision. But regarding the present situation, where over a million dollars is at stake, and where the cost of a referendum is minimal due to the September elections, there is no excuse for not asking every voter's input. So let's go on with it. And when you agree, let your opinion be known—time is short!

Letters to the Editor

THANKS

We would like to express our appreciation to all of our Greenbelt friends and neighbors for all their prayers, kindnesses, and support during our recent bereavement. Our special thanks to the Greenbelt Volunteer Fire Department and Rescue Squad for their assistance over the years and the peace of mind that their presence has always brought to us.

Endorsement

I congratulate you on your editorial last week, "Second Sellout." I heartily endorse your position! Please hear that, Gil, Tom, Joe, Ed, and Toni.

Somehow, in the contest between the North End School and the indoor swimming pool, in the process of assigning priorities, in the process of referring questions to committees and getting their reports, in the process of Tom White's questionnaire, somehow I lost track of a basic issue.

One cannot change history, but by remembering we can be saved from the condemnation of repeating our mistakes. When we first moved to Greenbelt in 1966, Greenbelt Road was four lanes, and one wondered why it needed to be so wide. The side now known as the Golden Triangle looked just about like the side opposite, Greenbelt Park.

We can't get that back, but what we can do is to save other areas from the same fate. How would you like to see low quality, high-density housing on Parcels 1 and 2, for instance?

Alexander E. Barnes

Honesty Recognized

I would like to make the citizens of Greenbelt aware of the fact that there is a good honest person employed at the Greenbelt Co-op grocery store. On June 11, I was shopping in the frozen food department when I heard a voice say "Excuse me, sir, you dropped this." I turned and found Darrel Diaz, who keeps the frozen food department well-stocked, handing me a twenty dollar bill I had dropped.

Many thanks to you, Mr. Diaz. It does my heart good to know there are still people in the world like you.

Walter H. Martin

PANORAMIC THANKS

I wish to thank all the people who helped make the Greenbelt Group Portrait such a success. First, without the help of Hank Irving, I never could have gotten up the pole to take the picture. Also in that regard, the city Public Works Department and the bucket truck they supplied were vital to the cause. Many thanks.

Most of all, I would like to thank the citizens of Greenbelt, the individuals and organizations who got together on the field in front of my camera and helped make a memory for future generations. Let's do it again next year, too!

In July, a 30 x 40 inch print, donated by Color Unlimited photo lab in Beltsville, will be on display at the library. Also, 8x10 inch prints can be ordered through me, with the profits going to the 50th Anniversary Committee. If anyone is interested in ordering, they can contact me at 474-0709 (see ad for details).

Preposterous

In reply to John Ward's letter "Future Clouded," which appeared in the June 4 issue of the News Review, that claimed the Roosevelt Mall (which I prefer to call the Center Mall) would deteriorate if the owner of the theater rented it to the highest bidder. This statement is preposterous. The changes the mall undertook in the past have only enhanced the services for Greenbelters.

Only the theater has remained undeveloped, dilapidated and unsightly for these many years. The marquee is falling apart, cobwebs are multiplying on the entrance ceiling and the ticket booth is a shambles. The rugs in the lobby swish up under one's feet, creating a hazard. The constant flow of cold air under the seats in the winter makes viewing a performance unbearable.

The mall could only benefit if the owner were to rent the theater space to the highest bidder. No businessman would accept the premises in its present condition and would insist on having the ugly sight transformed into something more pleasing to the eye.

What Sets Greenbelt Apart

I do not usually get involved with city policy debates. Now, however, I make an exception. Why? Because there is an issue before the council that could have a truly devastating impact on the city that has been my home since childhood.

As you may have guessed, I am referring to the proposal to reallocate funds earmarked for park land acquisition to other projects. While I can understand the desire of many to use the money for this or that, I believe such a policy shift carries with it a high price tag.

The issue is not whether the other projects proposed have their merits. Clearly they do. The question is one of priorities. The proposed funding change not only represents a breach of trust with the voters who passed the bond issue, its impact goes still further.

I would like to remind my fellow residents of one of our most precious community resources. This one, in the long run, is more important by far than any project thus far proposed. It is also one which, once squandered, is gone forever. Park land has been, is, and hopefully will continue to be something which sets Greenbelt apart from its suburban neighbors.

During my 29 years as a resident of this city, I have been able to see, first hand, the effect of developments encroaching upon the land that was once clear, open and unspoiled. It has been replaced by high-rises, traffic congestion, shopping malls, office parks and the like. Old Greenbelt, thus far at least, appears much the way it always has. It seems clear to me that the "green belt" that surrounds much of the city is the reason why. Are you willing to sacrifice this? I'm not. Think about it.

Woodland Hills Supports Original Bond Allocation

by Mark Davis

At its annual membership meeting on Sunday, June 14, families living in Greenbelt's Woodland Hills subdivision held an extensive discussion of the city's finances, property taxes, and allocation of bond sale proceeds. Presentations were made by residents Leonie Penney and Joe Wilkinson, a member of PRAB.

Particular concern was expressed by a number of attendees over the possibility that substantially less than the originally planned two million dollars would be spent for acquisition of park land. Most of those present believed that it would be inappropriate for the Greenbelt City Council to deviate from the allocation set forth when citizens approved the six million dollar bond issue by referendum. While it was acknowledged that the city might legally spend the bond proceeds other than as initially proposed, those present felt it would be morally wrong to do so. The sense of the membership was that substantial changes in the expressed spending plan would be a breach of faith with the voters.

At the close of discussion, a motion was made and approved overwhelmingly that Mark Davis, president of the Woodland Hills Community Association, should write to the city council on behalf of the 50 families living in the development. The letter will advise council members of the association's position that proceeds of the bond issue should be allocated as originally proposed to the citizens, including spending two million dollars for acquisition of park land.

The Association also went on record in favor of renovation of North End School. A separate letter to that effect will be sent to council.

The Greenbelt Vision in Retrospective

by Keith A. Winsell

Four well-known residents participated in a panel discussion on "Greenbelt and the Sense of Community" at the May 1-3 "New Towns" conference at the Greenbelt Hilton. The event was part of the community's 50-year history celebration.

The session was moderated by a past winner of the Outstanding Citizen award, Albert K. Herling. In his introductory comments Herling reviewed some of the "many reasons for our uniqueness." Part of it, he said, is a result of the architectural design. The physical closeness has improved communication, friendly relationships ("learning to disagree without being disagreeable") and causes residents to feel like "participants" with other people. Other early factors included the income limitation ("equality of misery") and the variety of activist groups that were established when the town was founded.

The first speaker, Mary Lou Williamson, moved to Greenbelt in 1962. She has served as editor of the Greenbelt News Review since 1972 and was selected Outstanding Citizen in 1985. She is also the general editor of the forthcoming pictorial history of the community.

Williamson indicated aspects of her background that made the atmosphere of Greenbelt especially appealing. She was raised in the "co-op atmosphere" of Hyde Park in Chicago, where there was also a strong "sense of community," and spent summers in a wooded region of Michigan. She found Greenbelt to be a combination of the two environments. The proximity of her husband's work at the Goddard Space Flight Center was the initial factor in their locating here.

Shortly after arriving, she became involved in both the Greenbelt News Review and the preparation of the 25-year history booklet. She was impressed by the "openness" of organizations and by the "unifying effect of the newspaper from the beginning", the first issue being published about six weeks after the first residents arrived. When the newspaper was confronted with a $2 million libel suit in 1965, a "Freedom of the Press Committee" demonstrated strong local support. The case was eventually resolved in favor of the News Review by a unanimous decision of the Supreme Court.

Williamson added that Greenbelt, unlike other suburbs, represented "freedom" for mothers. The safe atmosphere allows children to become "more independent and self-directed." The second panelist, Bruce Bowman, joined in this assessment. About his own children, he claimed to have "sent them to the woods" and "they raised themselves."

Bowman was attracted to the Greenbelt experiment when he took classes on "consumer cooperation" at Antioch College in Ohio. Since arriving in Greenbelt in the early 1940s he has been involved, as a member and official, in nearly every form of cooperative activity, both locally and nationally.

He characterized the changes in Greenbelt as the result of "growth by crisis." At the beginning, with few cars, it was hard to supply basic services to the new residents. Co-ops were formed to supply these needs, the "most democratic way of operating business." Even the local school had a "gumdrop co-op," he said. Eventually the local foodstore program was expanded into such diverse areas as service stations, and furniture stores in other communities.

Bowman also emphasized the high level of activism. There were 35 active organizations within a year of settlement in Greenbelt, and the city still retains the highest level of voter participation of any community in the state, Bowman said.

The final speaker was Margaret Hogensen, a Greenbelt resident for 13 years and current president of Greenbelt Homes, Incorporated. She traced her own involvement as well as the role of housing cooperatives in the community's history.

She remarked that, after living in several other states, "the sense of community in Greenbelt Homes is something you feel very quickly. . . . I had the feeling, in a strange sort of way, that I had come home." Not only is "democratic self-government" promoted in Greenbelt but "individual development" and "independent thought" as well. "Greenbelt people try to shape their world and make it better."

The cooperative home activity began with the Greenbelt Mutual Housing Association in 1940. Even with the pending sale of the community property by the federal government, individual ownership was an impractical alternative. Problems of surveying and dividing the property as well as the "physical design features" made cooperative ownership more realistic. Unfortunately the government allowed the buildings to deteriorate before the sale of the town at the end of 1952. A massive rehabilitation program was essential by 1980.

Hogensen also summarized the relationship between GHI and the city government. The link is not as close as during the formation period, she said. Regarding citizen participation today, she acknowledged that a "great sense of community" remains but that "too many GHI members play inactive roles in corporation affairs."

money. "Let's do it right," he said.

Council member Antoinette Bram dismissed the idea of another bond issue. She said that she couldn't see going to the voters and asking for another bond authorization before the council has spent the $6 million currently authorized. "It would be kicking dirt in their faces," she said.

Bram also said that she thinks "we have to get both pools up and running." She estimated that there might be more than $750,000 available for parkland acquisition and development, because she thinks it may be possible to get Parcels 1 and 2 for less than the amount allocated in the strategic planning priorities. Isaacs, on the other hand, said he thought the $750,000 allocated for acquisition of those two parcels "might be low."

North End School
Proponents of the renovation of North End School got encouragement from Putens, who said he doesn't want to demolish any of the school, and from Isaacs, who said he wants to renovate the new portion of the building and then wait to see "how it will function" before deciding on the rest.

Bram suggested that the addition to the public works facility be financed by the $493,100 reserve for building construction. She recommended that the bond issue proceeds be allocated as follows: $1.9 million for the police station, $3.2 million for the outdoor and indoor pools, $750,000 for Parcels 1 and 2. This allocation would leave $150,000 for the North End School. Added to the $243,000 North End School reserves, this money would total almost $400,000, which would enable the city to apply for two $200,000 state matching grants, which might possibly be awarded to the city. Giese cautioned, however, that the city might not get the maximum amount in grants and that, even if it did, the total would be insufficient to renovate a badly damaged building.

The condition of the building is attributable to water damage from burst pipes while it was still owned by the county, Mayor Gil Weidenfeld explained. In response to a question about why the city accepted the building in such bad shape, Bram answered that the city got "13 beautiful acres" of land for the price of one dollar. Ann Pisano, an activist in the movement to renovate the school and a member of the Committee for the North End Center, promptly accused Bram of being more interested in the land than the building. "I will go for parkland anytime," said Bram.

Citizens Comments

Several of those attending reacted with incredulity to the council's assertion that it is not sound to allocate the $6 million in equal thirds to building projects, the pools and parkland (the so-called 2-2-2 allocation). "Do you mean," asked Greenbelt East resident Dorothy Pyles, "that when we campaigned for the bond issue, there was no commitment to the 2-2-2?" Weidenfeld explained that the referendum question passed by the voters put no restrictions on the projects or which the money could be used but specified only the maximum amount which could be spent.

Woodland Hills resident Leonie Tenney, however, found that explanation unsatisfactory. Holding up the brochure distributed at the time of the bond issue campaign and released in the names of four of the five council members now in office, she pointed out that the brochure said that "The City Council has allocated bond issue funds as follows: Park land acquisition and improvements—$2 million, City building improvements—$2 million, Swimming pool facilities—$2 million." She noted that the ballot question itself referred only to expenditures as authorized "by City Ordinance No. 967." "Who knew what was in ordinance 967?" she asked indignantly. "We believed the brochure!"

Greenbelt East resident Tom Renahan also said that it came as a surprise to him that there was no commitment to the 2-2-2 allocation. "Legally there may not have been (such a commitment)," he said. "But people would be very surprised to learn that there wasn't." Barbara Simon, a supporter of North End School renovation, said that council should have explained that there was no commitment to the 2-2-2 allocation "loud and clear." "It was misleading," she said.

On the other hand, Ray McCawley, who is a member of the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board, maintained that council had made clear that the money could be reallocated among the projects. He supported Isaacs' call for an additional bond authorization. He suggested that the principle of three main categories of projects getting equal funds could be restored by giving more of the new money (assuming the referendum passed) to the parkland and construction categories to compensate for the pools' getting more of the currently authorized bond issue.

White Paper
Council member Thomas White, who was unable to attend the June 11 work session, submitted a paper in which he outlined a new plan for financing more of the projects than are on the list coming out of the strategic planning process. White's plan involves supplementing the $6 million bond issue and other reserves with proceeds from a five-cent tax rate increase over the next 10 years. White's priorities would include the police station, public works facility and the North End School renovation (funded at $1 million) in the construction category, the pools at the current $3.2 million estimate and the parks category as follows: Parcels 1 and 2, $750,000; other acquisition, $250,000; Schrom Hills, $220,000; Northway Fields, $600,000; Perimeter Trail, $180,000; and Greenbelt Lake/Attick Park, $400,000.

The total for the projects in all three categories would be $8,950,000 or $2,950,000 more than the available bond money. White estimated that five cents on the tax rate over 10 years would produce $2,982,330, slightly more than needed to cover the deficit. Giese expressed some reservation about the accuracy of this forecast but said he had not had time to analyze the figures.

White summarized his position in the statement, "... I believe we should adhere to the allocations described in the bond issue information. To the extent there are identified projects within a category exceeding the $2,000,000 allocation, some other means of financing should be used as described above. An added advantageous feature of my recommended arrangement is that it would accommodate the expressions of preferences heard from the citizens, it would decisively provide a workable framework for accomplishing a large part of the bond issue wish list, and it would help establish a credible rationale for future bond referendums that the city will likely consider."

Final Decision on June 29

Council intends to make a final decision about the expenditure of bond money at a special meeting on June 29. Weidenfeld said that the priorities would be voted on one by one at that meeting. "We need to give the staff the go-ahead as soon as possible on the priorities which are doable," he said.

Strategic Planning Priority List

Rank	Project	Estimated cost
1.	New police station	$1,875,000-$1,945,000
2.	Renovate outdoor swimming pool	375,000
3.	Acquire park land	750,000
4.	Construct indoor pool with combined bath house for both indoor and outdoor pools	2,800,000
5.	Addition to public works facility	500,000
6.	Improvements to Schrom Hills Park	180,000*
7.	Renovation of North End School	780,000*

* Note: Estimated cost is average of funds allocated by strategic planning subgroups.

Of the seven projects, it is possible to fund the top five with the bond funds and a reserve for building construction. The sixth project, improvements to Schrom Hills Park, can be partially funded with the bond issue. These funds can be supplemented with Program Open Space Grant funds.

Automobile Info at the Library:

Is there any place where people can find information on automobile prices, models, options, repairs, and how to deal with the professionals? Yes, the Greenbelt Library has a large variety of information sources, ranging from price guides to repair manuals.

People in the new car market can take a look at Consumer Reports (the auto issue comes out every April), as well as the automobile test magazines such as Motor Trend or Road and Track. For several years Jack Gillis, a former U.S. Department of Transportation employee, has authored The Car Book, a guide to domestic and foreign cars, mini-vans, and light trucks; their relative safety, economy of operation, and maintenance; and insurance costs. There are also chapters on seat belts, child safety seats, warranties, tires, and the complaint process. Emund's New Car Prices and Foreign Car Prices are issued periodically throughout the year to report the latest dealer and suggested retail prices, standard equipment, and suggested prices and dealer prices for optional accessories.

Nervous at the idea of going into the dealer's showroom? Read Gordon Page's Deals on Wheels or Darrell Parrish's The Car Buyer's Art. These two former auto salesmen have turned consumer advocates and "tell all the secrets" so people will know how the game is played.

Selling an old car or buying a used one? If so, it pays to know the "Blue Book" value. The library receives the NADA Official Used Car Guide, Eastern Edition published monthly by the National Automobile Dealer's Association which lists the retail, wholesale, and loan values for the past six or seven years of most American and foreign cars. Please know the exact year, model, mileage, and major accessories on the car to be priced to get the most accurate price information. The "Blue Book" (it's actually yellow) value is derived from dealer sales and wholesale auction data and reflects prices for cars that are in average condition. Both Consumer Reports and the Car Book have lists of used autos that are good values and those that should be avoided.

Back-yard mechanics take note! The library has a useful collection of auto repair manuals covering both American and foreign makes back to 1964 and also has manuals for small trucks, vans, and motorcycles. Most are available to check out. The library has specialized manuals on auto air conditioning, sound equipment, body repair, and repainting. A neophyte when it comes to cars? General books such as Brad Sears' The Last Chance Garage offer advice on dealing with mechanics and explanations of the workings of your auto. More detailed and excellently illustrated is a text book, Auto Mechanics Fundamentals by Martin Stockel.

For more information on the library's collection of auto books or any other problem where having the right information is half the solution, call 345-5800 or TDD 345-0831.

Greenbelt's New Chief

arrests than all the fancy, sophisticated criminal investigations that go on after the fact," he said.

Early Career

Craze began his police career in 1966 when he was 17 by joining the Air Force for training as a military officer. The military, he said, was the "only place around that a young man of that tender age could be a police officer." He said his earliest inspiration to become a policeman came during his Scouting days from a well-liked and much older Scout, who joined the Air Force right out of high school for the same reason he later did.

Upon leaving the Air Force, Craze said he stayed out of police work for less than a year. One of the jobs he recalled taking before joining the Greenbelt police in 1971 was at the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. in Cumberland. Craze, a native of Frostburg, said he kept that job for six months, "long enough to find out I didn't want to work in a factory all my life," he said.

He said the excitement of police work and the camaraderie of police officers hooked him into a career path. As Craze worked his way up in the department, he completed several law enforcement training programs.

From 1974 to 1978, he attended the University of Maryland full-time at night while pulling a midnight shift at the department. He finished his work at the university with a bachelors degree in criminology.

Craze now looks toward the goal of making the police department a more efficient agency. As part of his first budget strategy, Craze has asked the city to authorize a third lieutenant's position so that he can divide the department into three divisions, heading each one with a qualified person. Currently the department has an administration division and an operations division under which personnel doing detective work, regular patrol work, and special patrol assignments are all concentrated. According to Craze, it's necessary to establish separate divisions for the regular patrol operations and the special operations (i.e., criminal investigations, special enforcement unit, and canine unit) because of the growth that has taken place within the operations division since he joined the department. Thirty-eight of the 53 people in the department are presently in this one division. Thirteen people are in the administration division and the chief and his secretary make up the command staff).

Craze said two big steps in improving the department's efficiency are the recent purchase of a $108,000 computer system and the future move to a new building on the corner of Crescent Road and Kenilworth Avenue. Craze said the addition of the new computers will allow the department to maintain manageable records as the number of calls for service keeps increasing.

"All that has been done by hand, and that has really bogged us down over the years," he said.

The police chief also pointed out the improvements in efficiency that will result from the move to the new building in late 1988. He cited the safer handling of suspects and more working space for the staff as the primary improvements to be realized by the move.

Benefit Dance to Be Held For Special Olympics

Police Blotter

Based on Information Released by the Greenbelt Police Department

Members of the Selective Enforcement Unit arrested two men during the evening of June 5 for consuming alcoholic beverages in public near Roosevelt Center at the 100 block of Centerway. At 7:15 p.m. they arrested a 26-year-old non-resident at the Candy Cane City park and at 11:40 p.m. the second man, a 37-year-old non-resident, was arrested in the East Municipal parking lot. Both men were released pending trial.

Officer Mark Lagerwerff, patrolling about 1:25 a.m. in the 6900 block of Hanover Parkway, stopped one of two cars which had moved off suddenly at his approach. He found the back seat loaded with four sets of tires and rims. Responding backup officers stopped the second car. The car from which the stolen equipment had been removed was found nearby resting on cinder blocks. Two adult males, ages 19 and 21 and two juveniles, ages 17, all non-residents, were arrested on theft charges. The adults were held on $1000 and $700 bonds. The juveniles were released to their parents pending trial.

Nine pendants and chains valued at over $6000 were reported stolen on June 7 at the Best Products showroom in Beltway Plaza. The jewelry was taken from a display case in the customer service area.

Star Jewelers in Beltway Plaza reported jewelry stolen about 10 p.m. June 11 by two men. One of them distracted a clerk while the other reached over the counter and grabbed rings and chains from a display case. They fled on foot. Water Show, Anyone?

by Elizabeth Pels

Citizens interested in helping to produce a water show for the Labor Day weekend, are asked to come forward with name, phone number and talent(s). In addition to swimmers, people are needed to build a float, help with creative ideas for coordinating dancers and jugglers on the deck with routines in the water. We also need people with "prop" experience, costume designers and seamstresses, musicians (or tape artists) and a narrator. If enough people help, especially adults, it will be possible to have a water show. Practices will be held in the evenings during August.

Anyone interested in swimming in the show or sharing talents should sign up in the lobby of the swimming pool as soon as possible.

How often should a toothbrush be replaced?

One of the least expensive items in the fight against dental disease is also the most neglected and abused. Studies have shown that even the best toothbrush loses its effectiveness in as little as 3 months. Yet many people continue using the same toothbrush for a year or longer.

Bent or frayed bristles not only are inadequate for proper cleaning, but they can cause injury to the gums. For best results, replace your toothbrush every 3 to 6 months. Each time you replace it, be sure to obtain the same type as recommended by your family dentist.

emotions and as a form of literature.

Beauchamp is very pleased with the response the book has received to date. Several articles have been written in magazines and newspapers. Reviewers are intrigued with the multiple themes of slavery, the Civil War, women's history, and violence against women, as well as the personal drama in a family's life.

For the past 10 years, Beauchamp has been interested in women's studies and women's literature. This interest led her to pursue on a scholarly level women's private writings. She developed a course at the University of Maryland titled "Private Lives: Learning About Maryland's Literature and History Through Personal Records." It was through this course that she discovered the diaries of Madge Preston and unearthed the secret life of that unhappy woman. Beauchamp has spent eight years editing the letters and diaries, weaving the story together and writing the introductory chapter.

Bernice Kastner

Bernice Kastner is a mathematician who most recently has been working at the Department of Mathematics and Statistics at Simon Fraser University in Burnaby, British Columbia. Previously she worked for many years in the math department of the Montgomery College and this past year, at Towson State University.

It was during her tenure at Montgomery College that NASA asked her to update its book Space Mathematics, A Resource for Teachers, originally published in 1972 as part of the space agency's program to support aerospace curriculum supplements in high schools. Her task was to link mathematics with the use of computers as it relates to the aerospace industry.

Kastner's project began in 1982 with visits to NASA scientists at Marshall Air Force Base, Langley Field, and Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt. Some people helped her by writing typical mathematical problems, while in other cases she had to devise the problems on her own. She worked closely with both scientists and leaders in math education.

The work book, which contains 189 pages of mathematical problems, is designed to appeal to high school students of varying degrees of mathematical sophistication. "The tricky part was to show students the nature of reasoning . . . to be simple and still authentic," Kastner commented.

Kastner herself learned much from her research for the book. It opened up a new era of medical applications. However, she didn't have enough time or material to explore this aspect for the current book. The book is being distributed by NASA to math educators throughout the country.

Dorothy Sucher

Dorothy Sucher has had a varied career as an art major in college, an architecture student in later life and a family therapist specializing in marriage counseling. For a brief period, she chaired the Friends of the Greenbelt Museum and was instrumental in leading the way toward the purchase of 10-B Crescent Road, an authentic Greenbelt home to serve as the museum. However, it was her love for writing—particularly mystery writing—which pulled her away from all of these activities to pursue a creative career in the stimulating atmosphere of New York City for the past two years.

Sucher has written Dead Men Don't Give Seminars which will be published by St. Martin's Press in early 1988. The plot revolves around a group of cosmopolitan physicists, two of whom are Nobel prize winners who have not been on speaking terms for many years. They gather together for a physics summer institute on the shore of Lake Champlain. One of the Nobel prize winners suddenly dies from drinking a poisoned Bloody Mary. Sabena Swift, the sleuth wife of one of the professors, and her sidekick, Vic, try to solve the murder.

40th Wedding Anniversary Celebrated by the Baluchs

Fred and Dorothy Baluch celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary on Sunday, June 14 at their former home on Lakeside Drive. A surprise party was given in their honor by their children. Seven of their children, both grand children, relatives and numerous friends attended the picnic party.

All were entertained by poems and a skit put on by their children. A letter was read from the priest who married them. He is now the archbishop of Youngstown, Ohio. Fred and Dorothy now live in Ohio.

Sucher draws on her own experiences to provide background for the plot as she herself is the wife of University of Maryland physics professor Joseph Sucher. This is her first book to be published, and she is hard at work on another. She is seriously thinking of making this book the first of a series.

Greenbelt's three authors add much distinction to the city's anniversary year.

Our sympathy to Thomas X. White on the death of his brother, James Patrick White of Silver Spring.

Condolences to Wilma Vazquez, music teacher at Center School, on the recent death of her father.

Bruce and Ruth Bowman, 43-year residents of Greenbelt, are celebrating 50 years of marriage on June 26. Their three children, Peter, Sandra, and Barbara, will be here, along with daughter-in-law Rose and granddaughter Joysong. Hearty congratulations!

Congratulations to Nancy and Bill Marshall of Laurel Hill Road on the birth of their new granddaughter, Kellie Nichole Scott on June 5. The proud parents are Debbie and Denny Scott of Bowie. Kellie will be joining her big sister Kristi, who will be two in September. Also congratulations to great-grandmother Ethel Marshall of Ridge Road.

50th Wedding Anniversary Celebrated by Siegels

Miss Mattie Hendren and Mr. William Siegel were united in marriage 50 years ago on May 15, 1937 in Washington, D.C.

In April, 1938 the couple settled in the newly created town of Greenbelt, at 50-B Crescent Road. As their family grew, they moved to 23-D Ridge Road. They moved to their present address at Northway in 1958.

The Siegels celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary on Saturday, May 16 at a reception given by their four daughters, held at the home of their daughter and son-in-law, Nelson and Betty Rodgers.

The buffet luncheon was catered by daughters Carole, Betty, and Billie. A three-tiered traditional wedding cake was also served. The decorations and flower arrangements were done by daughter Rosemary.

The party was attended by their daughters, sons-in-law, five of their seven grandchildren, other family members, and many longtime friends and residents of Greenbelt.

roses." She likes her new surroundings, she says, but misses Greenbelt and has ordered a subscription to this newspaper.

Best wishes to Beatrice Huston, Mildred C. Awkward, Joan S. Summer and Jean F. Smith, staff members of Springhill Lake Elementary School, who are retiring.
