BUDGET

Public Works Budget Cites Environmental Practices

by Virginia Beachamp

Neither "joy" nor "philosophy" are words one expects to hear at a Greenbelt City Council work session on the budget of the Public Works Department, those folks who see that the city's roads stay in repair, that our garbage is picked up and that the ball fields are mowed. But the first began the evening's discussion when Mayor Judith Davis described her pleasure in reading the department's presentation of past accomplishments and future goals. The second word dominated a heated exchange later that came down perhaps to a matter of semantics.

Throughout the session, on April 16 in the Community Center, recycling was the major theme. The city's goal is to recycle 50% of the refuse stream, a goal set back this year when a purchaser of plastic products of all varieties was forced to discontinue his service, leaving only types 1 and 2 plastics now accepted.

Paper pickups are down as well, as fewer households subscribe to a daily newspaper. But yard waste, leaves and branches, was converted into 474 cubic yards of mulch and compost when the city contracted for the use of a large tub grinder. A composting facility is now being developed at Northway Fields and a second recycling facility is planned for Greenbelt East.

Recently, as time allows, the city has been carrying on research concerning the kinds of things people put into their garbage cans. If materials appear that could be recycled, homeowners may receive notes concerning the values of recycling. According to Assistant Director Bill Phelan, this intervention "seems to be helping." The department also worked out special arrangements with the Greenbelt Post Office and Greenbelt Homes, Inc. for them to clear out their office files and set out the discarded paper for recycling.

"Green" Building

Director Kenny Hall gave a preview of exciting plans for renovation and additions to the department's office and warehouse facility. These will be made as environmentally friendly as possible—what is called a "green" building. Recycled fuel oil, for example, could be used to heat it, in a process described as cleaner than the current use of gas. A solar system will heat the water, and a rain garden design will absorb water throughout the yard instead of sending it into drains. Up to 50% savings in energy uses are thus expected, Hall said. He predicted the design will be ready for bids this coming fall.

To help in preserving city streets, the department will be trying a new method of resurfacing involving an overlay procedure, which will be tried experimentally on Northway. During

If you ever wondered what it would be like to look down from the basket at the top of a cherry-picker truck, you should have visited the Public Works Department Open House on April 20. The open house coincided with Earth Day and Arbor Day celebrations. Many Public Works Department employees were on hand to describe what they do.

Greenbelt police cars were on display in the repair bays. Jim Keifline described the old and new logos that adorn the cars. As new cars are bought or repainted, a new 3-D-looking "POLICE" is attached to the sides of the cars. Keifline also pointed out that each car now has a unique number on its roof to assist in identification by helicopter, and cars are being fitted with new front grill guards to protect them from damage.

Several groundsmen were showing off the tractors and huge grass cutters that keep the fields and streets looking so neat. Another was giving tours of the greenhouses that contain flowers, bushes and even trees. Some are grown from seed and bulb, while others are purchased from nurseries.

FOP Seeks Greater Pension Benefits in Shorter Time Period

by Mary Moien

Craig Rich, president of the Greenbelt Fraternal Order of Police (FOP), proposed police retirement system changes to the Greenbelt City Council on April 24. Rich indicated that the objectives of finding and funding a new retirement system were to provide police officers with an equitable retirement package and to provide the city with a competitive recruiting/retention retirement package. After the presentation, it was apparent that if a change were to be made in the next fiscal year, a new actuarial study would need to be completed in the very near future.

The city will seek to approve approximately $5,000 to fund a study to determine exactly how much a new retirement system would cost the city.

History

For years, most police officers have belonged to the Municipal Corporation Law Enforcement Officers' Pension System of Maryland (MCLEO). At the time that this retirement system was approved, it was thought, based on actuarial data, that it would provide an officer with 50 percent of salary after 25 years of service.

However, it has not worked out that way. According to FOP figures, an officer retiring in 2001 at $50,000 salary with 25 years of service would receive about $14,000 a year, or 28 percent of salary, before taxes and health benefit costs are deducted.

With city approval, the FOP and police officers formed a committee to look into a new plan. Their ultimate goal would be a plan with 50 percent of salary after 20 years of service. Rich pointed out that the Greenbelt force has one of the lowest retirement benefit packages in the area for departments with 30 or more officers. Laurel, Prince George's and the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Police all offer retirement at 20 years.

Proposed Package

The Law Enforcement Officers' Modified Pension Benefit package (LEOPS) was proposed, a plan that a number of Maryland forces have switched to or are considering switching to. According to Rich, the FOP supports the LEOPS plan "100% with no wavering in the rank and file." Although it is more expensive for the officers and probably for the city, the officers "want a secure future."

Thanks to the committee who coordinated this event.

Lee Fink

Former Greenbelter Lee Fink, 85, died Tuesday, April 16, 2002 of heart failure at Arden Court Assisted Living Facility in Silver Spring. She had lived there for the past six years.

Mrs. Fink was born and raised in New York City. A very intelligent woman, she graduated from high school at the age of 16 and entered City College. She worked for Time Magazine with its founder, Henry Luce.

After marrying her husband, Larry, she moved with him to Washington, D.C. and then to Greenbelt in 1944. They lived in 20 Court Ridge Road. There they raised three sons. She taught second grade and remedial reading at Beltsville and Greenbelt Center Elementary Schools from 1955 to 1976, where she was known as a dynamic teacher. She completed her bachelor of science in education with honors at the University of Maryland in 1962 – the same year that her second son graduated from high school.

Mrs. Fink has been described by her friends as an outgoing, active woman with a twinkling smile that she kept to the end, even during her long struggle with Alzheimer's disease. In her youth she was athletic, and played basketball. She met her future husband while she was exercising, hitting a punching bag at the beach in New York. While she loved and nourished her family, she maintained her interest in learning, traveling, playing bridge, dancing and discussing politics. Her family remembers her as a wonderful mother and grandma.

In Greenbelt she participated in line dancing and square dancing at Center School. She played contract bridge and swam at the outdoor pool, where she enjoyed watching her husband play handball. A member of the National Education Association, she also was active in local PTAs as a parent and teacher.

After retirement in 1976, she and her husband went to Del Ray Beach, Florida but returned to Maryland about six years ago. To them Greenbelt was always home, even when they could no longer live here. Her husband of almost 60 years died in February 1998. She is survived by three sons, Walter and his wife Janet of Alexandria, Virginia; Robert of Washington, D.C. and Thomas and his wife Barbara of Columbia; four grandchildren, Dennis, Kevin, Karen and Katie and one great-granddaughter, Madeleine.

The family asks those wishing to make contributions in her memory to send donations to the Alzheimer's Association, 919 Michigan Ave., Suite 1100, Chicago, IL 60611.

Mary M. Fitzmaurice

Greenbelt pioneer Mary Fitzmaurice, age 91, died peacefully April 18, 2002 at the Lakewood home of her daughter and son-in-law, Mary and Donald Dorsey. She had been in declining health the past three years.

Mrs. Fitzmaurice was born in South Bend, Indiana, on November 10, 1910, to devout Polish parents. As a young woman she enjoyed sports and was captain of the women's basketball team at Wilson Bros. Haberdashery, where she was employed.

In 1936 she married Joseph L. Fitzmaurice, whom she had met when he was a student at Notre Dame University in South Bend. They moved to Washington, D.C., where her husband had already begun his career in the federal government.

In March of 1938 the young couple moved to the new town of Greenbelt with their infant son James, first to an apartment on Parkway and then to 8-D Hillside. During this time Mr. Fitzmaurice was completing studies for his law degree at Georgetown University. In 1948 they moved to 2-B Woodland Way. Mr. and Mrs. Fitzmaurice were among the founding families of St. Hugh's parish. Mr. Fitzmaurice was one of a committee of men who traveled to Baltimore to petition then Archbishop Curley to send a priest to Greenbelt to establish a Catholic parish. Greenbelt was then a mission parish of Holy Redeemer in Berwyn, and Greenbelt Catholics attended Mass first in Center School and later in the Greenbelt Theatre. In 1947 Father Victor Dowgiallo was sent to start up the new parish, which was named St. Hugh's, and Mr. and Mrs. Fitzmaurice were leaders in raising funds to build the school and later the church. Mrs. Fitzmaurice was a charter member of St. Hugh's Sodality and the Ladies of Charity. She was active in charitable works of those organizations until well into her eighties.

Mrs. Fitzmaurice was one of the women who helped prepare the convent in 58 Court of Crescent Road for the coming of the Sisters of the Holy Cross to staff St. Hugh's School when it opened in 1949. She volunteered at the school and supported all its activities, just as she had at Holy Redeemer School when her eldest son, James, went there. She always enjoyed her family, staying close and supporting her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren until her very last days. She also relished her designation as a "pioneer" of both the City of Greenbelt and St. Hugh's parish, and in 1997 participated in the anniversary celebrations of both city and church.

Mrs. Fitzmaurice's husband died in 1987 and her son, James, in 1998. She is survived by two daughters, Mary J. Dorsey of Greenbelt and Ann C. Layne of El Cajon, California, and a son, Joseph of Greenbelt; grandchildren Donald and Frank Dorsey, Lisa and Jennifer Bilotti, Sena and John Fitzmaurice and Sarah and Joshua Layne; and great-grandchildren Daniel and Amanda Dorsey. She is also survived by two sisters and two brothers, Dorothy Vertesich, Florence Kolber and Edward Torzewski, all of South Bend, and Richard Torzewski of Ocala, Florida. The family was especially pleased that Mrs. Fitzmaurice was well enough to enjoy a visit in South Bend with her siblings last fall.

Mass of Christian burial was offered by Father Thomas Crowley at St. Hugh's on April 22, 2002 with burial in Gate of Heaven cemetery.

Reality TV to Seek Contestants Locally

The TV show "Escape from Experiment Island" will be taped on a beautiful and remote Scottish isle this summer. Each group of contestants will spend a week building a series of adventurous experimental devices that will help them on their way to a thrilling escape. Producers will soon be traveling to the following cities to interview potential show candidates: Washington D.C., Baltimore, Boston, Detroit, San Jose, Jacksonville and Seattle.

Here's how the show works. Two teams of strangers are trapped on a remote island. Using only their ingenuity, some natural resources and scraps of civilization, each team must overcome a series of challenges to get to an escape craft that will take one - and only one - team off the island.

The producers provide the island, the teammates and all the necessary tools and equipment plus some spectacular means of escape.

Each team will have to figure out where the escape craft should land and how they will get there to meet it. If an appropriate landing site for the escape craft doesn't exist, the teams will have to make one. The first team to successfully reach their escape craft will leave the island victorious.

The producers are looking for contestants with all kinds of skills: the ability to change a tire, fix a leaky faucet, or build model rockets, along with a basic understanding of how things work.

For information, go to: www.discovery.com and click on the TLC home page to download the application, or contact Experiment Isle@aol.com.

GAC's Shrew Production Delights All

by Sabine Hentrich

"So The Taming of the Shrew isn't exactly PC [politically correct] by today's standards. True enough. But the play is such fun!" comments Norma Ozur in her director's notes. Saturday night's audience agreed; it was obvious that the Greenbelt Arts Center's production of William Shakespeare's comedy enthralled them.

Ozur's note refers to the main plot's infamous controversial, misogynistic undertones. The play is about "shrewish" Kate, the outspoken older daughter of Baptista, a wealthy gentleman of Padua, Italy. Her father has vowed not to allow her "gentle" and "kind" younger sister, Bianca, to be married unless the difficult Kate finds a husband first. When headstrong Petruchio comes to Padua to look for a wife, he hears about Kate (and her wealth) and decides to marry her despite her bad temper.

It is the end of the play, and particularly Kate's last speech, that makes many contemporary audiences scratch their heads. Kate explains where every woman's place should be and how she needs to regard her husband: as her "lord; her king; her governor..." It is easy to get past this stereotyping of women if one remembers that Shakespeare wrote these words in 1594.

Kate (Belen Pifel) well captures the transformation from a discontented, irritable woman to an obedient, selfless wife. She and her counterpart, Petruchio (Karl Heimer), are perfect as this odd couple whose first days of marriage turn out to be a disastrous roller coaster ride. Petruchio, who is just as stubborn as Kate, puts his new wife through a "marriage boot camp" designed to shatter her contempt towards him and the world. Pifel and Heimer are equally convincing at loving and hating each other.

The play, however, would not be the Bard's if it did not contain various subplots and even a play within a play. The main subplot involves Bianca (Cate Krage), the polar opposite of her sister. Pretty and pleasant - and therefore popular with men - Bianca is courted by three very different suitors: young Lucentio (Colin Fink), old Gremio (Stuart Fischer), and odd Hortensio (Sam DePriest). The actors manage to stay in character for their peculiar gaits, accents, and personalities. Krage, as Bianca, is wonderful as she experiences the opposite character transformation from her sister

Kate.

Aside from the funny cat-and-mouse games of Petruchio and Kate, much of the play's comedy is derived from mistaken identity jokes. Within these plots, Shakespeare's common theme of appearance versus reality surfaces. Lucentio and his servant Tranio, for instance, change roles in order for Lucentio to gain access to Bianca. Tranio (Jeff Landou) does a fine job portraying a servant pretending to be a master. The audience loved Lucentio's foolish servant Biondello (Norm Gleichman), who brings the humor in these mistaken identities alive.

The play within the play is actually The Taming of the Shrew itself. Director Ozur, who cut the play, added Shakespeare's original induction, which is frequently omitted. The induction is about a practical joke being played on a drunk by an acting troupe. The acting troupe dresses an intoxicated Christopher Sly (Larry Simmons) as a gentleman and provides him with a "wife" (played by a magnificent Shannon Webber in drag) in order to see a performance of the Taming of the Shrew. Sly never really finds out whether he actually saw the play or whether he dreamt it.

Whereas Shakespeare drops the Sly theme after the initial scene, Ozur kept it in the play all the way through. Her innovation was rewarded by the audience's laughter during the scene changes, when the spotlight briefly shifted back to Sly and his "wife."

Except for the Sly scenes Ozur added, her production of Taming of the Shrew was true to the original classic. She did a marvelous job of casting, and aside from some unintended age differences among actors (one of Bianca's suitors--supposedly her own age--looked a lot younger than she) everyone was convincing in his or her role.

The crew also greatly supported the director's vision. Norm Gleichman, who not only acted in several roles but also functioned as vocal coach for his fellow actors, helped everyone do a wonderful job with Shakespeare's challenging language. Trix Whitehall's sound design (which included live music and dance), Rebecca Flynt's set design, and Charlie Jones' costume design complemented the ensemble's praiseworthy performance.

Although part of the set design seemed a bit crude (the writings on the inn wall and the fairly modern-looking dart board, for example), the designers succeeded in creating an illusion of Elizabethan England and in putting the audience into the right mood.

Whoever would like to enjoy a great comedy despite its questionable political correctness may do so on May 3 and 4 at 8 p.m. at the Greenbelt Arts Center.

A Review

Shrew at the Arts Center

by Dennis Jelalian

The Greenbelt Arts Center is presenting The Taming of the Shrew by William Shakespeare on May 3 and May 4.

Any Shakespearean play presents the director with a number of challenges. For one, there is another play, The Taming of a Shrew, as Director Norma Ozur says, "referred to as A Shrew and The Shrew to tell them apart."

This production used The Shrew script cut by ... Ozur, with the epilogue from A Shrew added. The difference between Shrew as it is customarily done and this production is that it uses an induction which introduces a drunkard name Sly, who wonders, "... do I dream? Or have I dreamed till now?" It's a good question. Bartholomew, a page dressed as a lady, plays Sly's wife. They are brought back to cover scene changes. They have some amusing business, but interest in them wanes. And then there are several scene changes where they are not brought back. Having once established the pattern, I missed them when they weren't there. I think their material was all improvised. For this to work, more energy might have been spent giving them something to do. They need to form a closure, if only outlined.

The main plot of Shrew concerns Baptista, a rich citizen of Padua, and his attempt to marry off his two very different daughters, Bianca, the younger daughter, and Katharina, the elder. Shakespeare keeps these two strands well in hand. In one hand he keeps the Bianca/Hortensio thread taut as he plays with disguises and mistaken identity. In the other hand, he keeps the Katharina/Petruchio in rather more straightforward, if outrageous, fashion.

The cast did a creditable job by and large. I am amazed by Norm Gleichman, who plays the servant Biondello. He twists his body into outrageous shapes, but they are always appropriate.

Karl Heimer makes a magnificent Petruchio. Katharina (Belen Pifel) might have been played better. There was no evidence of her falling in love. She goes from a shrew to being contrite with no indication of anything happening to her. I was especially looking forward to the "duty that wives owe their husbands" speech. It seemed to be rushed. It lacked the irony. Tranio, played by Jeff Landou, is another of those people who get into playing a role gleefully. I enjoyed his performance.

The musicians added a nice touch, homegrown and folksy. But the dancers were another story. They all looked like they were poured concrete. There wasn't a smile in the lot.

Shannon Webber deserves a good hand for the wonderful job he did as Bartholomew, always hiding his beard behind a fan. Larry Simmons deserves a hand for the drunken Sly.

The set by Rebecca Flynt was workable and tidy.

2002 GAC Greenbelt Day

Calling all GAC youth theater alumni, all GES drama club participants, and all other youth of the community who are interested in that spring show I promised we'd do this year. The Greenbelt Arts Center Greenbelt Day Dramatic Program organizational meeting will be held on Saturday, May 4 at the Greenbelt Arts Center (123 Centerway next to the Post Office). It is desirable that as many students as possible should be accompanied by a responsible adult for at least part of the session. This is the only time a student will be allowed to attend without the proper permission form and other paperwork. We will discuss the activities for each work session, the various tasks involved in the production of the final presentation, and the preferences of each individual as to his or her personal involvement. Come with a signed permission slip or parent, ready to share your ideas for plays or projects to work on. Questions? Call Ginny Zanner, 301-220-0552.

If Greenbelt were to switch police retirement systems, there would be money available from the MCLEO fund to move to the LEOPS plan. The money available for the new plan would offset what the city needs to contribute. But, without an up-dated actuarial study of the current force, the amount of funds available to move is unknown.

Decision

The city council was generally in favor of a move to the plan. Councilmember Edward Putens commented to the FOP that the outlook is "more positive than two to three years ago. You've done your homework." However, the city would need to fund it with FY03 moneys, and the budget will be finalized by early June. Thus, an actuarial study must be funded and undertaken immediately. The council closed the meeting with the understanding that they would try to fund the $5,000 study, and the FOP would investigate how to have the actuarial work undertaken as quickly as possible.

(Editor's Note: In addition to the city's and police officers' contributions to the MCLEO pension plan, the city and officers also contribute toward a deferred compensation plan that provides officers with additional benefits at the time of retirement.)

the procedure, the current speed bumps will be removed and then replaced with a somewhat different design.

Unmet Needs

Handed out to councilmembers at the meeting was a two-page addendum referred to, but not titled, as "unmet needs." Listed in order of priority, these items were described as "not funded in the 2003 budget." While noting that the budget must of course be balanced, councilmember Tom White charged that the city manager should express "all needs" in the budget. This is a major issue in "the philosophy" of preparing a budget. If it's a need, we should take care of it, he stressed.

In response, Phelan suggested that a better term might be "new initiatives." These are items, Hall said, that "we would like but they aren't critical."

At this point Mayor Davis suggested that they constituted "a wish list," which councilmember Rodney Roberts agreed was a "better label."

Among listed items was funding for two non-classified nine-month positions, to provide extra help during heavy work periods. Additional cell phones for members of the building maintenance crew also was listed, as was software for tracking work requests.

Two other items involved hiring contractors for special work—one for stripping and scrubbing of the Community Center corridor, a time-consuming annual process that stretches the resources of the regular maintenance staff, whose regular chores continue unabated. The second need for a contractor involves high-risk tree work, especially during busy seasons.

At the end of the list, but desirable, again, from the point of view of the city's goals in recycling is the purchase of a soil screening plant to process fill dirt accumulating from city projects—a $15,000 item. Something between 100 and 200 yards of soil are excavated annually on city projects, the "wish list" reports. Previously disposed of at no cost at the landfill, this option will no longer be available. If this material were processed here, with rocks and other debris screened out, it could be mixed with compost and utilized for landscaping and turf repair projects.

"Could such equipment be bought jointly with other cities?" Mayor Davis asked, referring to the recent successful joint purchase of a street sweeper. Phelan agreed that this might be a possibility.

Parent Training "A Huge Success"

According to Group Facilitator Jamila Codrington, a CARES-sponsored parent training group which was held over a six-month period "proved to be a huge success." A high level of commitment by parents, consistency in attendance, and the fact that seven of the nine parents were present for the entire six-month period contributed to the success, said Codrington.

Further evidence of the success of the group was reflected through group cohesiveness and the sharing of responsibility. "The parents . . . proved to be the true source of information and guidance through the exchange of anecdotal stories and suggestions that provided different perspectives and solutions to solving each other's family management problems," said Codrington.

The parents said that the group provided them with an opportunity to share problems, explore ineffective aspects of their parenting, and offer advice to each other. Noticeable changes included the ability to establish more control with their children, to refrain from using destructive discipline strategies, to understand their children's behavior in a more age-appropriate manner and therefore adjust their expectations, in addition to being able to create a more nurturing and loving family environment.

Parents commented that these changes helped them to enjoy being a parent more. One sign of the progress of such a relationship was manifested in the final portion of the program, when children took turns reading statements to their parents regarding what they appreciated about them. "Parents were not only surprised, but also overwhelmed with joy and affection," according to Codrington.

At the end of the session, upon hearing that the funded period for the group had ended, members decided to hold informal sessions themselves. As Codrington said, "parents don't need my presence to facilitate their continued growth and progress."

Greenbelt CARES

The week of April 22, Greenbelt CARES was visited by Billie R. Baker, program specialist, Audit and Compliance Unit, the Department of Juvenile Justice, for the purpose of conducting a certification review. The agency was found to be in compliance and a certificate to that effect will be sent shortly.

Teresa Smithson and Robyn Strauss, crisis intervention teacher at Greenbelt Elementary School, held the last sessions of two Student Leadership Development groups on Monday, April 15. Second and fifth grade students enjoyed refreshments, received certificates of completion, and discussed what they learned from their participation in the group on Tuesday, April 23.

Smithson and Strauss held the first session of a "Getting Ready for Middle School" group on April 23. The group lets sixth grade students discuss the changes and challenges they will face next year and identify the classroom behaviors that are helpful in making the transition to their next level of education.

A Response

City Horticulturist Weighs Benefits of Bt Spraying

by Bill Phelan, Assistant Director of Public Works, City of Greenbelt

This spring many egg masses for gypsy moth caterpillars were found on trees on Plateau Place and in city woodlands surrounding that area. Gypsy moth is an alien invasive species that escaped captivity in North America and has been devastating to oak forests. The city's Advisory Committee on Trees reviewed this information and urged the city to join forces with the state control program. The city council concurred, and we have arranged for the aerial application of Bt to these woodlands. Without treatment, complete or partial defoliation of oak trees in the area would result. In addition, failure to treat at this time would result in a larger, more widespread population next year. Eventually, the population would decline through naturally occurring biocontrols but this would not occur until after severe damage was done.

In letters to the editor, residents have raised questions about the safety of aerial Bt applications. I offer the following information to reassure the public of the safety of the proposed applications.

Bacillus thuringiensis (Bt) is a commonly found aerobic bacterium in soil, air and plant surfaces worldwide. This bacterium produces a crystal that is toxic to certain insects. The specific strain of Bt used to control gypsy moth caterpillars is Bt kurstaki. This strain only affects Lepidopteran caterpillars [those that become butterflies or moths], generally in their first through third instar (3/4" or less in length). Bt degrades rapidly in the environment and is ineffective after a few days. Material exposed to sunlight typically has a half life of about four hours.

It is true that Bt contains inert ingredients that are not listed on the label because they are trade secrets. This, however, is not as sinister as has been implied. Bt is a strain of bacteria that manufacturers brew by fermentation, in a process similar to the way beer is brewed. Many producers of food products such as beer, pickles and bread have trade secrets about their process. We continue to eat them anyway. All Bt formulations (including their inert ingredients) have been reviewed by the EPA for their potential mammalian and non-target toxicity. In addition, many independent studies have confirmed the safety of these applications.

Bt has been widely used for many years in agriculture as well as on organic farms. During all this time, no adverse environmental effects have been found, other than the death of Lepidopteran caterpillars. Even the Rachel

"... no adverse environmental effects have been found, other than the death of Lepidopteran caterpillars."

Carson Council's Basic Guide to Pesticides lists no effects on mammals or other non-target organisms.

It is true that this strain of bacteria will kill other caterpillars present at the time of application. Two in our area killed during these applications for gypsy moth caterpillars are the tent caterpillar and cankerworm, both of which are damaging to a wide range of trees in our area. Many native caterpillars either have not yet emerged, or are at a stage that is too advanced to be affected by Bt. In addition, most forest Lepidopterans are moths, so there is little damage to butterfly populations. Research has also shown that there is little or no long-term effect on populations of non-target caterpillars.

Drought, gypsy moth feeding and cankerworm infestation have stressed the oak trees in the treatment area over the past several years. It is likely that another bout of defoliation would result in the death of many trees. In addition, if many trees in this forested area died, more sunlight would reach the forest floor. Exotic invasive species such as multiflora rose and honeysuckle would likely colonize these areas quickly, since they spread more aggressively than native species under these conditions. The city and GHI already have a serious problem with invasive species on the edges of woodlands. One of the best ways to maintain the natural vegetation is to maintain the forest canopy.

Finally, it should be noted that failure to treat will most assuredly have negative effects on the ecosystem. As the oaks decline or die due to infestation by gypsy moth caterpillars, all of the species of plants and animals that rely on the oak trees for sustenance and shelter will suffer. Even humans have adverse health effects related to gypsy moths. In the end all of our actions are based on weighing the benefits of any action compared with the risks of that action. Here it is obvious the benefits of applying Bt far outweigh any potential risks.

Tent Caterpillar Nests Appearing

Eastern tent caterpillars have begun hatching and building their white-colored webs, or tents, in roadside and landscape trees. These caterpillars are often confused with the very different, and very damaging, gypsy moth caterpillar. Gypsy moth caterpillars usually hatch about mid-April and they do not make tents or webs.

Eastern tent caterpillars are dark gray with a white stripe down the middle of the back. They have a row of blue spots along each side and are covered by short dark hairs. Gypsy moth caterpillars are mottled gray, have tufts of long hairs along each side and have a double row of blue dots behind the head followed by a double row of red dots along the back.

Eastern tent caterpillars prefer to feed on the leaves of wild cherry trees, but will eat leaves of crab apple, hawthorn, peach and plum trees. They pupate early, giving the trees a chance to re-leaf and recover. They can usually be controlled by destroying the nest, or by tearing it open so that birds can get to the caterpillars. Where possible, the nest can be removed from the tree and soaked in soapy water to drown the caterpillars. Removing the nest early, when it and the caterpillars are small, will prevent most damage.

Gypsy moth caterpillars prefer the leaves of oaks and other valuable neighborhood landscape trees such as birch, beech, willow, hawthorn and linden. They do not make tents or web nests. They hatch in mid- to late-April, several weeks later than eastern tent caterpillars and feed for 10 to 12 weeks. The state will be spraying in selected areas of Maryland starting this week. Spraying in Greenbelt focuses on the area of Plateau Place and extends into the woods at the end of the street.

Since the larger gypsy moth caterpillars eat voraciously as they get older and feed so much later into the summer, trees do not have time to re-leaf and recover from severe leaf loss. A cycle of two or three years of gypsy moth defoliation can cause severe dieback, or even death, of the tree. Controlling gypsy moths on a large scale requires a professionally-operated aerial spray program. For more information, call the Extension Service at 1-800-342-2507.

A Greenbelt Gardener

by Rosie Rhubarb

The most important planting season of the year has arrived. During the next weeks the summer garden can be planted. The seeds and plants placed in the soil now will produce flowers and vegetables until November. This is what most people consider the main garden, for most, the only garden of the year.

The weather will still be on the cool side but there will be hot days more and more frequently. The soil has warmed up. The important condition for plants this time of year is the frequent rain showers. Once seeds are sown and plants planted they need to be kept constantly moist. Seeds will die if they dry out and little plants have such a small root system that they can't take much dryness. Don't flood the plants but make sure the surrounding soil is moist. Planting now means Mother Nature helps with this job by providing frequent showers, hence the gardener has to water less.

What to Plant

The range of possibilities of what can be planted is huge. In fact, deciding what to plant can be an overwhelming job. Do yourself and your budget a favor by doing at least a little planning before you walk into the garden shop. Otherwise you will be overwhelmed with mouth watering choices. And later you will find yourself unable to digest all the treats on your plate.

Planning the Garden

Planning the garden need not be detailed or time consuming. It merely means taking the time to decide what you really want. (How much time do you want to spend on the garden? How much money?)

Make an honest estimate of how much time you are willing to spend in the garden. If the answer is little, that's ok - there are attractive plants that don't require much work, but be honest enough to buy them and skip by the great looking plants that take a lot of time and upkeep. As a general rule of thumb, plants that do well in our climate require much less work. The right plant for the right place is much less work and will produce better.

Plant shade loving plants in the shade and sun lovers in the sun and plants and gardener will be much happier. For the vegetable garden, most of the plants typical for the summer garden are sun lovers - tomato, pepper, squash and beans. These plants will produce in some shade but the less shade the better. In the shady yard salad greens will grow well, so the owner of the shady yard does well to have a vegetable garden that features greens in the spring and/or the fall.

Flowers

In the shade flower garden a few plants reign supreme - impatiens, coleus, and begonia. This list is small but the first two come in a range of colors and shapes. So you need not stick to cute pink impatiens if you don't like them. Try bright orange New Guinea impatiens or the new varieties of double impatiens that look like small roses.

If your flower garden gets at least five to six hours of sun you have a great range of flowers to choose from. A key factor to consider this year is how drought resistant a plant is - even if rainfall is normal such plants require less care.

Drought resistant annual flowers include: gomphrena, strawflower, lisianthus, zinnia, marigold, cleome, cosmos, and tithonia. The last five can be grown from seed. Cleome should only be grown from seed because it has a deep growing main root. Several of these are not well known but I mention them because I have grown all of them successfully in dry conditions, some in drought conditions. Tithonia is an orange daisy with a yellow center. Lisianthus is one of the most beautiful flowers I have grown. Everybody who sees them loves them. The petals are about an inch and a half long. The single varieties look like poppies or tulips; the double varieties like roses.

Auction Cornucopia

Billed as a 'Shindig,' the Greenbelt Rotary Club and the Women's Club of Cheverly are joining forces to present a silent auction, buffet, cash bar, and tripping the light fantastic on Friday, May 3 at 7 p.m. at the Cheverly Community Center. The cornucopia overflows with auction items both hysterical and historical - with Hot Air Balloon Rides, close-in tickets to three Orioles game (see 'em lose up close and personal) and Elvis Presley memorabilia for devotees of the King.

Auction items gustatory and auditory proffer dinners at several area restaurants, including some where actual music is played by real people like Oleta Adams or Sue Matthews at the Rams Head Tavern. If all this scares the gentle reader half to death, the preparation of a simple will and power of attorney is on the block - and as neither death nor taxes can be escaped, financial consultation and tax preparation also go to the highest bidder.

Given the sartorial standards usually displayed in the Greenbelt Co-op, the determined bidder is strongly urged to secure whiter teeth, beauty treatment gift certificates, original designer jewelry, and reflexology treatments and then purchase a wild weekend in Ocean City to test out the effects. If Ocean City isn't exotic enough, then a 4-night Jamaica Vacation Package might do.

Atlantic City is the destination for the reverse auction - where two three-night Weekend Getaways will be given away to participants. Wear whatever public decency permits - there is a cover charge. Obtain more information from 301-474-1300.

American Legion and
City of Greenbelt
 Benefit Ball
Friday, June 14, 2002
Greenbelt Marriott Ball Room

Every now and again, we are given the opportunity to take part in something very special. Sometimes we don't act on it and miss the experience and excitement of helping our men and women who are serving our country. Friday, June 14th, the City of Greenbelt and the American Legion are proud and excited about their recent partnership to host a benefit ball for the USO (United Service Organizations) World Headquarters. However, the success of this benefit depends the community. Your generosity will help send a strong and positive message that we proudly support our service men and women. The USO supports its troops, its communities and its country. The USO is a non-profit, non-governmental agency, depending on the generosity of American people. Please take a moment to fill out the attached sponsor form and return it today. All proceeds go to the USO World Headquarters.

The historical contributions of the USO since World War II are well known. Their needs are no less diminished today, especially since the events of September 11th. Let's all band together and support this worthwhile service. "The great intangible of American's wars beyond logistics, beyond strategy, beyond wonder weapons and generals, is the spiritual force of its fighting men and women and that is the force that the USO magnificently services."

In honor of our service men and women and to celebrate the response of the citizens and organizations, we are having a special gala event on Friday, June 14, 2002 at the Greenbelt Marriott in the Grand Ballroom. Marriott has donated the ballroom and some of the food costs. The musicians and performers are also donated their time and talents. The evening will include dinner, dancing to the music of the 40's, and a great show. To purchase tickets at a cost of $35.00 each contact Jackie Shabe-Rochefort at 301 345-4967 or e-mail jackieusn@hotmail.com.

To show our appreciation, your name will appear in the evening's program. Additionally, recognition of your support will be placed on the Greenbelt American Legion Post 136 web site and Contact Newsletter, and a special thank you ad will appear in the Greenbelt News Review. We also anticipate coverage by local newspapers and television stations, as well as support from area radio stations.

In anticipation of your support, we sincerely thank you. Should you have any questions, please contact Carl Dentinger (301 783-6556. e-mail CIDD@starowner.net) or Hank Irvin (301 397-2200).

Earth Day Activities Provided Education and Fun!

ies. It was obvious that the workers take great pride in their jobs.

Many visitors were strolling between the lake, with its Earth Day and Arbor Day activities, and the large public works compound, which had hot dogs and snacks. To the delight of many children, Greenbelters Chris and Lindsay Holder were visiting the lake with their two large snakes, which appeared to like the sunny weather. One was a python and the other a boa.

Mayor Judith Davis and other councilmembers were planting trees for Arbor Day and accepting a "Tree City" plaque. Davis asked the crowd how many years had Greenbelt been a "tree city." Many replied with the correct answer - 65 years - which is the number of years the city has been in existence.

Beth Baden, state forester, presents Greenbelt's Tree City plaque to Mayor Judith Davis.

City Notes

The week of April 22, the horticulture crew began planting new materials at the Museum; planted Adopt-a-Trees at 73 Court Ridge playground, near the Youth Center, the Community Center and at the Dog Park; removed downed trees at the playground at Ridge and Crescent, on Morrison Drive, Mandan Road, Greendale Place and Fayette Place; contracted the removal of two large dead trees, one on Greenhill and one on Empire; and continued planting and mulching at the new Wetlands Center.

The parks crew continued work on the Wetlands Center, constructing the stone walls and benches; prepared Schrom Hills and Braden Fields for the Steve Gingell Softball tournament; installed a swing set at the Lake Park; worked on the climber at the Museum playground; and repaired the climber at Springhill Lake Recreation Center.

The facilities maintenance crew completed painting all the light poles and bollards in Roosevelt Center, returned a shopping cart to the Co-op, removed the life guard station from the shallow end of the outdoor pool, and worked with a contractor extending the exhaust pipe for the emergency generator at the Community Center.

The streets crew continued work doing base repair of the asphalt on Ora Glen Drive and continued work for relocation of the Animal Impound Area.

SATISFACTION EXTRAORDINARY.

If you're a member of GHI, the time is right to serve as part of the leadership team.

No experience is necessary, and there is a role to fit every schedule, every skill set. Best yet, your passion for Greenbelt and for GHI living is ultimately the only requirement to serve on the Board of Directors, the Audit Committee, or the Nominations & Elections Committee.

If you care about GHI, now is the time to act. Call the GHI office at (301) 474-4161 to learn more and register your intent (a short form is required). Your co-operative needs you. Your neighbors need you.
