Candidates On the Ballot

As a public service, the News Review has provided biographies received of those candidates seeking public office. The following two biographies were received this week.

Elizabeth Pawlak

Greenbelt resident Dr. Elizabeth Pawlak, a former senior scientist and current patent lawyer, is the Republican candidate for the office of the clerk of the court. She has been politically independent until recently, when she joined the Republican Party.

A native of Poland, she led scientific teams in biotechnology and pharmaceutical companies and was a faculty member at the Yale University School of Medicine, the Medical College of Pennsylvania and the University of Vienna in Austria. She decided to seek a law degree at Georgetown University, where she graduated in 1992, to work in the field of pharmaceutical, biotechnology and medical patents. As a patent attorney, Dr. Pawlak mainly practices before the United States Patent and Trademark Office. She speaks German, Russian and Polish fluently and has a working knowledge of

by James Giese

What with snipers and the threat of war in Iraq looming, it has been difficult for candidates to draw attention to their campaigns for next Tuesday's general election. In Greenbelt, election interest is tempered by the apparent lack of a close race for the Fifth District Congressional seat, while in other areas, close races will decide which party controls the US Congress for the next two years. Nor does there appear to be great interest in the local elections, where the results for many candidates appear to be assured and where there has been little candidate activity since the primary election in Greenbelt.

Negative Ads

Greenbelt voters will have their best chance to influence an election in the race for Governor. Published polls indicate a neck-and-neck horserace finish for the Democratic and Republican candidates Kathleen Kennedy Townsend and Robert Ehrlich. Listeners have been bombarded with radio and television ads extolling the virtues and blasting the faults of the two candidates. Unfortunately, these ads have increasingly become more negative, faulting the opponent rather than setting forth candidate's objectives if elected. Townsend, for example, faults Ehrlich for not supporting strong gun control, while he, in turn, faults Townsend for not successfully fighting crime.

Meanwhile, state budget projections become gloomier and gloomier with major deficits forecast unless more revenues are produced or expenses are cut. Political analysts fault both candidates for not adequately dealing with this issue. Both are urging greater support for education including funding of the Thornton Plan; the construction of highways, in particular, the intercounty connector, a new highway across Montgomery County; and the construction of the Purple Line, a light-rail line to run from Montgomery to Prince George's County with Ehrlich favoring the outer route and Townsend the inner route. To bring in added revenues, Townsend advocates increasing the cigarette tax; Ehrlich supports legalized slot machines at race-tracks. However, both agree that expenditure cuts will be necessary. Ehrlich sets a goal of cutting the total budget by four percent with some budgets being harder hit than others. He would sell the Governor's plane and yacht and reduce aid to local governments. Townsend, in a more detailed plan, would cut ongoing programs by about $100 million this year, $200 million the following year, make one-time cuts of $215 million and redirect $350 million to the General Fund including $79 million from the transportation trust fund.

Running with Townsend for the position of lieutenant governor is Charles R. Larson, a retired admiral who was superintendent of the Naval Academy. Michael

by Mary Moien

Almost 11,000 Greenbelters are registered to vote in next week's general election, according to the Prince George's County Board of Elections. Those who did not vote in the primary will find new voting machines in use – the AccuVote TS voting system. The machines are similar to those used in the city election last year, with a series of screens that the voter views and then makes selections from by touching the name of the desired candidate on the screen. The voter can change his or her mind by touching the candidate's name again. After all screens have been viewed, the voter finalizes the choices. (See instructions on page 14.)

Redistricting

Every 10 years, the legislative districts in each state are redrawn according to new decennial census population data. This time redistricting has shifted Greenbelt residents to the 22nd legislative district from the 23rd district. This change affects the state senator and delegates who will represent Greenbelters, since Greenbelt is no longer in the same district as Bowie where Greenbelt's former representatives live.

Voting records indicate that the primary turnout was about 32 percent for Democrats and less than 20 percent for Republicans. A close race for governor and the local race for county executive may increase voter turnout in the general election.

Greenbelt remains in the same congressional district, the 5th district. The 5th district also includes all of St. Mary's, Calvert and Charles Counties as well as parts of Anne Arundel County.

Polling Locations

The four Greenbelt polling locations will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Election Day, Tues-

City Council Okays Advance For Jaeger Tract, Other Items

by Sandy Smith

The Greenbelt City Council took an important step toward achieving a long-term goal – the acquisition of the Jaeger Tract, a 17-acre area adjacent to Greenbelt Park – with the unanimous passage by the Greenbelt City Council of the provision of $200,000 to add to already existing financing to reach the $1.5 million sale price by the tract owners. The $200,000 payment, approved by the city with this vote, does not constitute an actual payment but a guarantee of funds to be available as needed.

Mayor Judith Davis and councilmembers made it clear that the city would not be out this money; rather it would simply be advancing it in anticipation of fund-raising efforts to secure the money. In addition, Program Open Space funding could be applied if needed.

The National Park Trust, which has been working in partnership with the city, will now engage in a full-scale effort to raise funds for the park. In addition, the city expects to continue these efforts along with homeowner and citizen associations, such as residents of Westchester Park, who have already contributed a considerable sum.

All councilmembers spoke glowingly of this plan, recalling the lengthy and extensive efforts to reach this point. Paul Pritchard and Jim Coffin, of the National Park Trust, thanked the city and its citizens for their support and active involvement.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts characterized the Jaeger tract acquisition as a "win-win" proposition. He said that the city stands to benefit considerably by the addition to the park and that handling the issue in this manner meant a sharing in the cost with relatively little financial outlay by the city.

Museum Lecture To Be on New Deal

What does it mean to "build community"? How are Greenbelt and other federally built New Deal towns carrying forward the ideal community principles on which they were founded? Stuart Patterson, a doctoral candidate in American studies and culture at Emory University in Atlanta, will provide a presentation on New Deal communities Tuesday, November 12, 7:30 p.m. at the Greenbelt Library.

From small agrarian colonies like Arthurdale, W.V. to larger garden cities like Greenbelt, the federal government designed a hundred or so new towns as "demonstration models" of what FDR described as the New Deal "principle of the local community." This talk will explore the conflicts between the real and the ideal in the New Deal communities. By comparing a series of the new towns and their current community museums, Patterson will demonstrate how the past and the present, the real and the ideal, relate to the ongoing American project of building community.

Patterson is currently writing his Ph.D. dissertation on two New Deal "subsistence homesteads" communities, Arthurdale, W.V. and Aberdeen Gardens, Va.

This program is co-sponsored by the Greenbelt Museum, the City of Greenbelt and the Greenbelt library. For more information, contact the Greenbelt Museum at 301-507-6582.

Dems Apologize For "No Show"

The Eleanor & Franklin Roosevelt Democratic Club wishes to apologize to the members of the public who came to our meeting on Friday, October 18 for the purpose of meeting and hearing Jack Johnson, Democratic candidate for Prince George's County executive.

Mr. Johnson was detained at two separate Coordinated Campaign events in Baltimore City for Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, both of which featured former president Bill Clinton. When a cell phone call from a Johnson aide told us how far away he still was at 9:30 p.m., we accepted his apology. Should he win his race for office, we will arrange for him to speak as soon as possible.

Pioneer Annie Halley Lived 65 Years in Same Home

by James Giese

Greenbelt pioneer Annie W. Halley died peacefully on October 22 at age 90 in her Greenbelt home, the home she moved into 65 years before with her husband Edward and son Edward, Jr. She is believed to be the last adult pioneer to continuously live in an original Greenbelt home since first moving here in 1937. Except for some modifications in the kitchen and bathroom, her home is much as it was when she first moved into it.

Halley was born in Remo, Va., where the Wicomico River meets the Chesapeake Bay. Her father was the captain of a menhaden fishing boat, and her six half-brothers also were fishermen. She went to school in a horse-drawn buggy and had as pets a cat, a duck and a big collie dog. She graduated from the local consolidated high school in a class of five or six.

A Baltimore doctor who came down to the Northern Neck to hunt ducks recommended her for nursing school. While at school in Baltimore she met Edward Halley. They were married in 1932, causing Annie Halley to be dismissed from nursing school, as married women were not permitted to pursue such a career.

The Halleys moved to Washington, where Ed accepted a job with the water department. They lived with a brother of Ed's. Their only son, Edward, Jr., was born in 1933. In 1937, the Halley family became one of the first 50 families to move to Greenbelt, residing at 62-B Crescent. The Halleys quickly became involved in town activities.

They attended meetings that founded the Greenbelt Community Church, which initially held services in the elementary school (now the Community Center). Annie Halley became superintendent of the primary Sunday school. Ed, Jr. recalls that at that time, the Community Church was pretty much the only church in town. It was nondenominational and intended to be all-inclusive. (Later other denominations were formed and in 1948 Community Church became affiliated with the Congregational Christian Church.)

Ed, Jr., recalls that all the rooms across the hall from the school gym were used for the Sunday school. There were over 100 children in the school. When the church obtained land for its own sanctuary, with the help of Eleanor Roosevelt, Annie Halley involved the school children in raising funds to purchase chimes for the carillon tower. They held a variety of fundraisers staging plays and Tom Thumb weddings. (Tom Thumb was a midget made famous by the showman P. T.

Annie Halley

Barnum. There had been great publicity when he had married a midget woman.) The children raised over $1,000. Greenbelter Lee Shields, the son of another first family, remembered at the funeral being involved in some of the events Mrs. Halley put on.

Annie Halley also organized the church's summer picnic at Greenbelt Lake.

Band

Both Edward and Annie became active in the Greenbelt Band. He was band manager. She chaperoned the majorettes and helped in many ways. Ed, Jr. was permitted to join the band at an early age as a drummer provided he furnished his own uniform and instrument. It was there he met his future wife, Mary Ann Kramer, who played the saxophone.

The Greenbelt Band consisted of mostly high school age members. It was a marching band, but also gave concerts. It was much in demand as it was the only band in the county. It was under the leadership of two brothers who had played in the Marine Corps Band with John Phillips Sousa, Paul and Dan Garrett. There was in addition to the regular band a feeder band composed of the younger and less well trained members.

Bill Dove, who also attended the funeral, remembered how involved Mrs. Halley had been with the band. He also recalled that she boasted about how easy it was for her to watch the town parades, as she just had to step outside her door and watch the parade pass by on Crescent Road. Dove's mother, Linda, who worked for many years in the city's finance office, was one of Annie Halley's friends.

Roosevelt

Ed, Jr., recalls that one day his mother was outside hanging clothes when Eleanor Roosevelt made one of her frequent visits to Greenbelt and drove by. She stopped to talk with Halley and asked to see the inside of their home. Halley was proud to have entertained the First Lady in that fashion.

Halley and a friend got part-time jobs one Christmas at Kann's Department Store in downtown Washington. Somehow, the Greenbelt housing management found out and she was forced to quit her job. At that time, Greenbelt regulations were very strict as to income limitations and women working instead of staying home to raise their families.

This all changed when World War II came along. The men went off to war and the women took jobs. Halley went to work for the Census Bureau in 1942 compiling vital statistics. She was a keypunch operator in the early days of computers when data was stored on cards by punching holes in them. She eventually became a supervisor and later her office became a part of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. She retired from the federal government after more than 30 years service.

Both Annie and Ed Halley were helpful participants in all the activities of their son. She was a chaperone at dances at the Drop In Center, a war surplus Quonset hut located behind Roosevelt Center that was the early forerunner of the Greenbelt Youth Center. Ed, Jr., played in a band there called the "Cement Mixers."

Halley became an active member of the Birmingham Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star. She rose to the highest rank of the local chapter and also held state offices.

Grandsons

Halley had four grandsons. She liked to be with them on an individual basis. For their birthdays, she would have them spend the night and then take them toy shopping. Grandson

Robert recalled how she loved to shop and how meticulous she was in wrapping gifts, a skill she taught him. His career is now in retail merchandising and he gave credit to his grandmother for causing him to take interest in such things.

Robert, and eldest grandson John, both recalled the family gatherings at their grandmother's. It was tradition for the family to attend Christmas Eve services at Community Church and then go to Annie Halley's home for hot ham tea sandwiches at a table "set to perfection," Robert said. He also recalled watching the annual Labor Day parade from their "box seats" and eating the best Southern fried chicken.

Services for Halley were held on October 25 at the Borgwardt Funeral Home in Beltsville with interment at Fort Lincoln Cemetery in Brentwood. Memorial contributions may be made to the Alzheimer's Foundation or the American Heart Association.

Halley is survived by her son, Edward M. Halley, Jr., four grandsons, John E., Robert D., Edward M., III, and James P. Halley, seven great-grandsons, and a great-granddaughter. Her husband preceded her in death.

Annie Halley Remembered: Her Life in Early Greenbelt

On several occasions, Annie Halley recalled her early years in Greenbelt. Two selections follow. The first is an excerpt from "Greenbelt, History of a New Town, 1937-1987," Chapter 3, Social Construction by Barbara Likowski and Jay McCarl. It tells something about the kind of person she was.

Ed and Annie Halley lived in a small Washington apartment with their three-year-old son Eddie and Ed's brother and his wife. In a pouring rainstorm, the representative came to interview them. Annie offered to take the man's wet overcoat, but he declined. As he approached one of her upholstered chairs, however, little Eddie came out and said, "Don't you sit in that chair; my momma will skin you alive."

Though slightly taken back, the man smiled and replied, "Young man, you're right!" and promptly removed his coat. Despite this outburst, or perhaps because of it, the Halleys were selected as one of Greenbelt's first families. Of 12,000 families applying, 885 were selected.

Recollection

The following recollection of her early years in Greenbelt was given by Annie Halley to Dorothy Lauber and included in "Looking Back," the collection of recollections prepared by Lauber and published by the city on the occasion of its 50th anniversary.

(Ed and Annie Halley moved to 62-B Crescent Road on October 15, 1937. They were to have been one of the first 25 families to move in, but they had just paid a month's rent on their apartment in Washington and had to wait until the 25th. However, they were given a key to their new home, and they came out all that month to have another look, clean a little more and try to decide how to arrange things.)

We had been living in Washington with our four year old son, Eddie. Ed worked for the District government. Our car broke down on moving day on the way to Greenbelt and the moving van had to push us. We already had friends here as we had met the Eshbaughs when we were trying to choose a house, and we liked each other right away.

There were so few children in school that Eddie was allowed to start kindergarten early. Ed played softball and tennis and was on the committee that organized the Community Church. I helped establish the church nursery and became church secretary. We met at Center School for a long, long time.

Ed joined a woodworking class and one evening before he got home from work I opened the paper (this was in November) and there was a picture of Ed making me a fireplace for Christmas. He had noticed the photographer but hadn't thought anything about it, and certainly hadn't known he was going to spoil my surprise . . . but it was a wonderful present.

Ed was also in the Greenbelt band. It was organized by the Garrett brothers and Ed served as manager after a while. Paul Garrett was the first director and Dana Garrett was the second. When Eddie was older, he wanted to be in the band, and although he was under the age usually required, he was allowed to join provided we buy his instrument and uniform. Ordinarily these were furnished free of charge. Eddie played drums and was the youngest member for quite some time. The band got to be real good and they played concerts a lot. It would enter competitions that the Lions' Clubs used to sponsor, and it went to Chicago and New York. The competition was pretty stiff and one year our band was the runner-up. And then there were the majorettes . . . they were so good that they took first place and paraded down 5th Avenue one time.

We spent a lot of our time on church activities - fund raisers for our church building drive went on for years. I was superintendent of the primary department and it pledged $1,000 so we could have chimes. That was a lot of money in those days and some people said we'd never raise it, but we did. The children brought their pennies, we served lots of meals and even had a Tom Thumb wedding. Mrs. Roosevelt helped us get our land and we got title to it in 1949.

We've had a good life here. I went to work for the Census Bureau in 1940 and my mother lived with us and helped take care of our son. Ed retired a little bit ahead of me. We still live in the same house and have a lot of our first Greenbelt friends.

Nursery School Kids Putter in Science

How many cranberries does it take to make a grape float? Kids and parents found out at Greenbelt Nursery School's Pre-school Science Night held October 4.

The event attracted families from around the community who wanted to make slime, check out friction or investigate dinosaurs' digestion. Each of the experiment tables was staffed by a scientist or science enthusiast. "We had a great time," says event coordinator Amy Hansen. "We'll definitely do it again."

Demonstrators Picket Hoyer's Office

More than 15 Greenbelters took part in the October 26 rally and march held in Washington against a war in Iraq. A dozen area citizens, most of them Greenbelters, also took part on October 17 in a protest against passage of the recent resolution to wage war on Iraq. They demonstrated in front of Congressman Steny Hoyer's office because he voted "Yes" on President Bush's resolution permitting him to go to war in Iraq without further congressional action.

The demonstration took place from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. outside Hoyer's district office at the US Courthouse in Greenbelt. Picketers handed out literature to the public explaining their opposition to this war. Others carried copies of literature and a letter from the Prince George's Peace and Justice Coalition to Hoyer's staff.

A Review

New Play about Marlowe Looks at an Old Crime

by Sabine Hentrich

Gretchen Jacobs' new play, "Brightness Falls," which opened on October 25 at the Greenbelt Arts Center, discusses the suspicious circumstances around Christopher Marlowe's premature death in 1593. Marlowe, a Cambridge-educated playwright (unlucky enough to have lived in the shadow of William Shakespeare) — led an extremely dubious life that ended in a brawl.

Jacobs says she was interested in Marlowe after watching the movie "Shakespeare in Love" and subsequently wrote her play using, among others, Charles Nicholl's "The Reckoning" and John Bakeless' "Life of Marlowe" as sources. "The story is strongly based on fact, with some speculation filling in the gaps," Jacobs writes.

A narrator (Bill Hardy) eases the audience into the play's intricate historical, political and biographical plot. The story begins in 1593 with a trial following the stabbing death of Marlowe in a pub brawl. The audience assumes the role of a jury while listening to the different parties' accounts of Marlowe's violent death. In the next scene, the audience travels back 11 years in time to understand why Marlowe's life ended at age 29.

Jacobs' play is a great piece of writing which certainly provides a challenge to any modern day actor and audience. The ensemble succeeded both in keeping the audience's attention in terms of the many facts, and in delivering a performance that was interesting and at times even funny. The narrator, in particular, not only helped the audience understand, but also provided them with ample humor during which writer/director Jacobs mixed two different eras — contemporary and Elizabethan. In the beginning, for instance, one learns that Marlowe was a spy. Jacobs took advantage of some common modern-day spy stereotypes and dressed actor Hardy in a trench coat under which he would soon reveal his elaborate pumpkin hose. Further, during one of his introductory speeches, Hardy used his mandolin to play the James Bond theme song. Hardy was very confident in his role, never too silly, never too serious and therefore a definite audience favorite.

Stephen Davis was a good choice in the role of Christopher Marlowe. He plays him as an overly confident and narcissistic young man, yet manages to relate his character's vulnerabilities. Sometimes, however, Davis portrays him as so arrogant that one has difficulties in empathizing.

As the people accused with his murder, Robert Poley (Stephen Cox), Nicholas Skeres (Sam DePriest) and particularly Ingram Frizer (Greg Coale) do an admirable job. They work well on an interesting chemistry with each other; however, their dialogues are a bit drawn out and too detailed to remain captivating throughout. Coale added some great parody as a petty criminal who gets himself too deeply involved with the wrong crowd.

Ron Vardiman was excellent as prosecuting Coroner William Danby. Vardiman, who previously amazed audiences at the Arts Center, was convincing as a man of the court whom one was terrified to lie to. Fellow playwrights of Marlowe, Robert Greene (Bill Jacobs) and Thomas Kyd (Matthew Katz), also make noteworthy appearances in Jacobs' play as friends, roommates, lovers and ultimately traitors of their more talented colleague.

In a little less than two hours, the audience is introduced to 27 characters — only four of whom are female. Shirley Weaver and Kristen Long are nevertheless remarkable in the multiple roles they portray in a play where women are terribly outnumbered. Weaver made a good down-to-earth pub landlord who really did not care to be involved in a murder case. Long herself must have been surprised at her own comic talent eliciting so many hearty laughs from her audience in two such brief roles.

Although the director and cast did an admirable job on opening night, the play needs to come off the page and onto the stage with a little more zest. Some actors play a bit statically and have trouble grappling with the material. In their defense, one has to add that various dialogues are tiresome and drawn out. Luckily, this will probably correct itself as the play's performance improves over its running time.

Charlie Jones' and Hopi Auerbach's costumes are beautiful and appropriate. The only point of criticism was the static black slip-on shoes most male characters wore. A little bit more variety would have been nice. The latter also concerns the set design collaboration by many members of the cast and crew. The set was kept in dark, predominantly black hues, and often looked bare and uninspiring — more a set for a truly dark tragedy, which this was not.

As Ownership Changes Sanchez Muses on Theater

by Eileen Peterson

Paul Sanchez, looking toward the 12th anniversary (on Dec. 25) of the reopening of the Old Greenbelt Theatre as a single-movie house, is extremely grateful for the community support he has received in his efforts to keep the theater open.

Through the ups and downs of the theater's life, these dozen years have often seemed like a movie script. A few years ago, the people rallied mightily, he recalls, and the city is on the verge of buying the theater portion of the building.

"We expect the acquisition to be accomplished within the next month," says City Manager Michael P. McLaughlin, "and we are in negotiations with Mr. Sanchez to continue his managerial position."

In recent years, a 'Friends of the Old Greenbelt Theatre' group was formed. Well-received fundraisers, such as a festival of independent films and the appearance of an original cast member of the "It's a Wonderful Life" movie (which filled the theater with hundreds of out-of-town visitors) was followed by theme series such as the Alfred Hitchcock festival.

Long-run Successes

Such movies as "Chocolat" ran here five or six weeks, and most recently "My Big Fat Greek Wedding" was here 11 weeks — the most successful run ever at the theater, Sanchez comments.

The questions come constantly: why run a movie so long here? Why not change every week or so? The answers are: "If it does well, we keep it. We are a business," and "It is often part of our contract with the distributors."

"A first-run movie," Sanchez explains, "is either a new movie that hasn't played in this area (our county). Or it could be one on the other hand, were fantastic. Both worked perfectly in creating an Elizabethan mood and adding authenticity at the right moments. For example, during one of Marlowe's prison sentences, one could hear constant dripping water sounds in the dungeon-like cell.

Whoever enjoys a good Elizabethan, historically-based, yet modern play is welcome to do so on Fridays and Saturdays through November 16 at 8 p.m., and for matinees on Sundays, November 3 and 10 at 2 p.m. at the Greenbelt Arts Center.

University to Give Free Concert

University of Maryland Symphony Orchestra, the Maryland Opera Studio, and the University Chorale with guest artist, Carmen Balthrop, soprano, will participate in a free concert in the Dekelbourn Concert Hall of the Clarice Smith Performing Arts Center on Saturday, November 2 at 8 p.m. James Ross is music director.

The concert will feature Verdi's most popular overture, La Forza del Destino, Beethoven's humorous Symphony no. 8, and Ravel's lyric fantasy, L'Enfant et les Sortilèges.

that has been out for three or four months. A second-run movie has already played in the county and we are the second place to feature it."

Must Hold

No matter how it does here, Sanchez must sign a contract with the distributors to hold a first-run movie at least two or three weeks. If it does well, the run is extended. There are only a certain number of distributors that do well in Greenbelt, and Sanchez can't afford to break his good working relationship with them, he explains.

This month begins what Sanchez describes as "the doldrums," a time of year when movie theater going drops off. The conditions of showing a movie may include one that require that, "If we do a certain business on weekends, we are required to hold the movie another week."

It's Personal

"I like the (Greenbelt) theater and I like old movies, and that's why I've kept the theater open, (despite its losing-money periods)," Sanchez reflects. "I don't do everything for money."

New Acquisitions

Recently, Sanchez (P&G Theatres) bought the closed Avalon Theater on Connecticut Avenue at Western Avenue in the District of Columbia. The two-theater house is being restored, and he plans for a January 2003 reopening. He also has three P&G theaters at Montgomery Mall, a theater in Chestertown, Md., and one in Tappahanock, Va.

Sanchez hopes his explanations of his contractual constraints will enlighten faithful patrons who have wondered why some movies are held so long. During the past few years, Sanchez has installed new seats and carpeting, and the eventual restoration by the soon-to-be owner, the City of Greenbelt, is an exciting chapter in the history of this 1937 movie house, he reflects.

At the time of the "It's a Wonderful Life" event, Arch Campbell of the local NBC-TV station did a news feature segment here. He described the Old Greenbelt Theatre as a "jewel."

Summer Space Camp Seeks Support

by Virginia Beauchamp

Imagine a summer camp program at NASA/Goddard Space Flight Center designed to attract young people to careers and adventures in space flight and technology. That was the prospect that Joseph J. James, president and CEO of the Prince George's County Economic Development Corporation (EDC), shared with the Greenbelt City Council at a work session on Monday, October 14. Such camps, James said, include interactive exhibits and simulations.

The prospect seems a natural for this area, James suggested, with its two major aeronautic and space-age facilities – Goddard itself and Andrews Air Force Base. The camp, which would be located at the NASA Visitors' Center, would draw students to participate in intensive three-to-five-day programs. But it could also be used for day trips by local school classes.

The camp's program could draw on military flight memorabilia like helicopters and fighter jets at Andrews AFB but would focus primarily on space-age developments like the Saturn rocket and the Space Shuttle.

Such a camp already exists at Huntsville, Alabama at the Space and Rocket Center, where it has been operated since 1982 by the U.S. Space Camp Foundation. The Alabama Space Science Exhibit Commission, which operates the Huntsville camp program, has expressed "a strong interest" in becoming involved with the Prince George's County project. This comment is included in a feasibility study prepared for EDC by Economic Research Associates, the Washington, D.C. branch of a national association.

Although two similar programs in Florida and California have since gone out of business, James believes their problems can be avoided here. Apparently these projects failed in part because travel by air collapsed and general insecurities developed after the 9-11 disaster. James noted that this area, however, is a center of population easily accessible by automobile, and the nearby area is particularly rich in cultural advantages.

Partnership

Also contributing to the development of the concept locally are some institutions that are already part of the partnership: the Marriott Hotel, the College of Education at the University of Maryland-College Park, Prince George's Community College, the Owens Science Center and the Prince George's County school system. James had earlier approached the City of Greenbelt to join the partnership.

City Manager Michael McLaughlin confirmed that he and Joe McNeal, assistant director of facilities for the Department of Recreation, had talked earlier with James concerning possible in-kind services the city might be able to supply. Among these were use of the swimming pool by campers, early assistance with registration systems, and development of shared programs between the city-run summer camp and the space camp.

Mayor Judith Davis suggested that the camp could also take advantage of its proximity to the Smithsonian's Air and Space Museum and the College Park Aviation Museum.

Councilmember Thomas White asked if EDC had looked into the Anacostia Trails Heritage Area program as another possible local collaborator. James acknowledged that he had spoken with them earlier and would renew the contact.

Master Plan

Councilmember Edward Putens was interested in how the facility would fit in with the developing Goddard Master Plan. James replied that Goddard spokesmen had been encouraging. The visitors center, where the camp would be placed, will be positioned outside the secure perimeter in the new campus design.

James said he was not looking for a financial contribution at this time from the city. In regard to funding, he noted that Congressman Steny Hoyer's office has promised to hold $150,000 in this year's federal budget for the program.

Big Changes to Be Implemented at Café

Several major changes were announced at the annual members meeting of the New Deal Café, which was held Sunday, October 27. The café, located in Greenbelt's Roosevelt Center, has obtained a new espresso machine, a new kitchen manager, a new baker and a license to sell beer and wine. Customers have found that the new espresso machine provides a smooth, flavorful cup of espresso or cappuccino in half the time. The new kitchen manager, Ellen Siegel, has a great deal of experience in restaurant operation and is expected to contribute to the Café's continued growth and maturing operation. Jess's cookies and the selection of premium specialty beers and imported house wines have received raves.

At the meeting, Terri Rutledge, General Manager, provided a financial report summarizing the café's finances, including a comparison to the previous two years of operation. The sluggish economy and recent events seem to have impacted business significantly and practically depleted the Café's reserves. However, there is optimism that the recent changes at the Café and a renewed emphasis on fundraising may turn things around.

Elections were held for two of the five board positions. As a result, Joyce Abell and Richard McMullin were elected for two-year terms.

It was announced that a new organization has been formed to support arts and entertainment at the Café called 'Friends of the New Deal Café'. The group, headed by Barbara Simon, will apply for state and local arts grants, and may accept donations from interested persons.

Several special events are in the planning for November, including a New Deal Café rummage sale on November 9, 9 a.m. to noon and an upcoming crafts fair. The Café will continue to provide live music at least two nights a week, and produce the Roosevelt Plaza Music Festivals during the warmer months.

Steele, who had been chair of the Maryland Republican Party, is Ehrlich's running mate. Also on the ballot for the Libertarian Party are Spear Lancaster, a business owner, and Lorenzo Gaztanaga.

Political pundits believe that a strong vote in Prince George's County is needed for Townsend to win. Whether a campaign rally featuring former President Bill Clinton will achieve that goal, or whether Democrats dissatisfied with the party's choice for county executive and lack of other hot races will choose to stay home could be the deciding factor in the gubernatorial contest.

County Executive

Many Greenbelters will be following with interest the race between Republican Audrey Scott and Democrat Jack Johnson for county executive, even though neither candidate has done much campaigning in Greenbelt. With the county population overwhelmingly Democratic according to voter registrations, most people think it unlikely that Scott, who is white, can beat Johnson, a black man in a county that now has a majority black population. Although he received only about 37 percent of the Democratic vote in the primary election, it is believed that Johnson will keep enough Democratic support to overcome Scott's challenge. Scott, however, has proved herself a popular vote getter in the Greenbelt-Bowie area, having been successfully elected first as Bowie's mayor and then beating out a Democrat eight years ago to become a county councilmember. It is expected that some of the Greenbelt Democrats, who favored Rushern Baker and Jim Estep in the Democratic primary, could switch their support to Scott as they did eight years ago for her.

Johnson, who has been the county's State's Attorney, has done little campaigning in Greenbelt. He failed to appear at a recent Democratic Club meeting to which he had been invited, because it conflicted with a Townsend campaign event featuring former President Bill Clinton. Apparently, Johnson's political strength rests in his courting of the congregations of black churches.

Scott too has done little campaigning in Greenbelt since the primary.

State Races

In most other races, Democratic candidates appear to have a significant lead over their opponents, if any. Besides governor, Greenbelters will be voting for the Maryland comptroller and attorney general. William Donald Schaefer, emerging from a successful primary battle, faces little known Republican Gene Zarwell. J. Joseph Curran, Jr, unopposed in the primary, is being challenged by Edwin MacVaugh. Both Schaefer and Curran, seeking reelection to their offices, are expected to win.

While there are two very close congressional races in the state, the outcome of which could decide whether the House of Representatives is controlled by the Democrats or the Republicans, the Fifth Congressional District is not one of them. Greenbelters choice will be between Democrat Steny H. Hoyer and Republican Joseph T. Crawford on the ballot or Green party write-in candidate

B. Auerbach. Hoyer, now of Mechanicsville, is seeking his 12th term of office. Crawford is an energy and environmental consultant from Waldorf. While Crawford may get some support from the southern areas of Maryland within the fifth district, Hoyer will do well here, based upon past performance. Auerbach is from Greenbelt and is a retired librarian.

Greenbelters will have only one name on the ballot, Paul G. Pinsky, Democrat, for state senator from the 22nd district, the new legislative district within which Greenbelt is located since this year's redistricting. For the Maryland House of Delegates, Greenbelters will have little more choice. Three Democrats, Tawanna P. Gaines, Anne Healey and Justin D. Ross will be seeking the office opposed only by one Republican, Dominique J. Brown, a business owner from Riverdale. On issues of particular interest to Greenbelters, Brown is strongly for legalizing the use of slot machines, Healey conditionally supports them and Gaines and Ross are opposed; Healey and Gaines would support raising the gasoline tax to fund transportation projects if other means of funding are not possible, Ross and Brown oppose; Brown supports the intercounty connector, Ross opposes and Gaines and Healey are undecided; all support building the Purple Line; Brown supports the death penalty, Gaines opposes it, Healey would limit its use to extreme cases and Ross is equivocal on the issue; Ross and Brown would support prohibiting drivers from using hand-held cell phones, Healey and Gaines would oppose and Brown, Healey and Ross would support legislation to restrict the ability of judges to modify criminal sentences and Gaines would oppose.

County Offices

For county council, Bowie businessman and city Councilmember Douglas J. J. Peters, Democrat, and Melvin B. Johnson, a realtor from Greenbelt, seek to replace Audrey Scott as the District Four representative on the county council. While these candidates appear to agree on issues more often than not, they do divide on one of great interest to Greenbelt, the development of Greenbelt Station at the city's Metro station. Johnson supports the development, although he feels it should encourage walking development, and Peters opposes it, but if it is approved he would seek it to be transit oriented.

For the Clerk of the Circuit Court, Republican Elizabeth J. Pawlak, a Greenbelt lawyer, is challenging incumbent Democrat Rosalyn E. Pugh. The only other contested local race is that of Judge of the Orphan's Court where Richard J. Landon, a Republican Federal employee from District Heights, is seeking one of three openings. Opposing him are three incumbent Democrats, Wendy Alise Cartwright, Mitchellville, Angelo Castelli, Oxon Hill, and Albert W. Northrop, Croom.

Unopposed office seekers who are already all but elected are Mary Ellen Barbera, Judge of the Court of Special Appeals At Large; Glenn Ivey, State's Attorney; Lynn Loughlin Skerpon, Register of Wills and Michael Jackson, Sheriff.

Also on the ballot are 12 questions relating to amendments to the state constitution (3), the county charter (4) and authorizing county bond issues (5). (See last week's issue.)

day, November 5. Greenbelters from the center of the city, precinct 3, will vote at the Greenbelt Community Center, 15 Crescent Road; residents in precinct 6, the North End, will vote at Greenbelt Elementary School, 66 Ridge Road; Springhill Lake residents, precinct 8, will vote at Springhill Lake Elementary School, 6060 Springhill Drive and voters in precinct 13, Greenbelt East, will vote at Eleanor Roosevelt High School, 7601 Hanover Parkway.

Party Affiliation

In Greenbelt, Democrats continue to outnumber Republicans by more than 4 to 1. Of the city's registered voters, 67 percent are Democrats and 14 percent are Republicans. Far smaller numbers belong to the Green, Libertarian and Reform parties as shown in the chart. This year, for the first time, Green party members represent one percent of registered voters in the center city precincts. Members of other parties as well as those who describe themselves as Independents or Declines (for declining to choose a party) are grouped together. Declines represent 17 percent of registered voters or a slightly higher percentage than registered Republicans.

At the state level Democrats outnumber Republicans by 2 to 1; at the county level, the ratio is 5 to 1 and, at the 22nd legislative district area, the ratio is 4 to 1. This year's figures for the 5th Congressional District indicate that Democrats outnumber Republicans by less than 2 to 1.

Polls Open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Election Day is Tuesday, November 5. Polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. at the four precincts which serve Greenbelt – Greenbelt Community Center (third precinct), 15 Crescent Road; Greenbelt Elementary School (sixth precinct), 66 Ridge Road; Springhill Lake Elementary School (eighth precinct), 6060 Springhill Drive; and Eleanor Roosevelt High School (thirteenth precinct), 7601 Hanover Parkway.

Any registered voter who has doubts about where to vote may obtain additional information by calling the Election Office at 301-952-3270.

Bob Auerbach Not on Ballot

by Mark Miller

Longtime Greenbelter, peace activist and Greenbelt Greens member Bob Auerbach is running in the November 5 election as a write-in candidate for US Congress, 5th District. The State Board of Elections would not place his name on the ballot.

Unlike the Democratic and Republican parties, whose nominees are automatically given a place on the ballot without any signature requirement, a third party – like the Green Party – is required by Maryland's ballot access law to gather large numbers of signatures for each of its nominees. Auerbach was duly elected by the Maryland Green Party and by all three local chapters of the Green Party in the 5th District and filed a timely declaration of candidacy with the State Board of Elections. However, Maryland's ballot access restrictions have kept him off the ballot.

A lawsuit alleging the unconstitutionality of Maryland's ballot access restrictions was filed on August 15, 2002. The plaintiffs in that lawsuit include Bob Auerbach and the Maryland Green Party, as well as Beth Hufnagel, a professor with an accounting background who is the Green Party's nominee for Comptroller of Maryland.

More information about Auerbach can be found by visiting www.mdgreens.org.

Dr. Pawlak has over 10 years experience in championing equal access to courts for all residents and in forcing the courts to repeal unconstitutional procedural rules. Having done a lot of volunteer legal work in Prince George's and having argued pro bono on behalf of disabled and indigent litigants in difficult cases, she has witnessed a disturbing trend in the court system.

Melvin Johnson

Melvin Bernard Johnson, 50, Greenbelt resident since 1998 and county resident since 1968, is seeking the County Council seat for District 4. He is married to Carolyn, a lifelong county resident and they have six daughters. Melvin graduated from Central High School in 1970 and attended Bowie State College until he was drafted into the US Army, where he served as a military policeman during the Vietnam era. After completing his tour of duty, he received a degree in marketing/retailing from Strayer College.

His wife attended Roosevelt

High School and graduated from Largo High School. Daughters Melinda and Belinda graduated from Suitland High School in 1995 and Goucher College in 1999; Tiffany graduated from Roosevelt in 1999; Natalie graduated from Jericho Christian Academy in 2001, where his two youngest daughters Faith and Jacquelyn attend.

Johnson has worked as a county taxi driver, part-time for more than 20 years. Currently, he is a self-employed residential/commercial realtor with Prestige Realty in Largo. He is also a principal with Johnson & Daughter's Tax Service. Johnson has served on the board of directors of the Mitchellville Community School of the Arts and volunteered since 1997 at the Jericho Christian Academy. He is a football and basketball official with the county boys and girls clubs and his hobbies include playing chess, internet scrabble and reading. A political neophyte, Johnson's political experiences range from winning the student council treasurer race in 1966 to hearing about his grandmother Alice Dunnigan's reporting experience with the Truman Whistle Stop Campaign and the Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson administrations.

Roberts recapped the payment contributions to the acquisition: $1 million from the federal government without a matching fund requirement, courtesy of the intervention of Congressman Steny Hoyer; $100,000 from the National Park Service; $100,000 from the City of Greenbelt; and an additional $200,000 yet to be raised that has been guaranteed by the National Park Trust. This is the amount that will be advanced by the city if needed and later reimbursed.

In accordance with an October 25 letter to the National Park Service from the Maryland Department of Natural Resources, the remaining $100,000 needed to meet the $1.5 million Jaeger Tract sale price is expected to come from state Program Open Space funds.

ACE Tutors

Council also unanimously approved a $5,000 project developed by the Advisory Committee on Education (ACE) to train reading tutors. ACE recognized that many who volunteer as reading tutors do not have the training to make their time with students most effective. ACE volunteers will develop the curriculum and provide training on weekday evenings as well as weekends to accommodate people's schedules. This program meets ACE goals of addressing school needs and involving the community.

Councilmember Alan Turnbull congratulated the group on identifying a need and developing an innovative program to meet that need. The $5,000 would be used for publicity, refreshments and workshop materials. ACE hopes to schedule the workshop for March or April, following coordination and planning with Greenbelt schools.

Recycling Center

With another unanimous vote, council approved a new recycling center to be located in Greenbelt East at the end of Hanover Drive. The Hanover Drive location beat out possible sites at the end of Mandan Road in Windsor Green or the Schrom Hills parking lot. The new recycling center was approved on a trial basis. Its use and operation will be reviewed in several months before a final decision is made to keep it there permanently.

The center will collect newspaper, mixed paper and cardboard. There will be two small containers and one larger one provided by the same company, Silver Spring Recycling, which also operates the recycling facility in Buddy Attick Park.

The new center is one element in the city's effort to recycle 50 percent of the waste stream by 2004. In addition, the city receives market value for the recycled paper products. Sheldon Goldberg of the Greenbelt East Advisory Committee, however, questioned the impact of the new center on recycling programs already in operation in various Greenbelt East developments.

Council responded that the goal was to make recycling easier and more convenient for Greenbelt East residents and to complement – not compete with – services already in place. The city wanted to provide a more convenient drop-off point than Buddy Attick Park for residents whose communities did not currently have a program.

Zoning Authority

Greenbelt is working with the cities of Bowie and College Park to try to obtain planning and zoning authority at the municipal level. Representatives from the three cities decided to draft a plan of action in preparation for a meeting with the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission or as a basis for a legislative proposal. The plan outlines a rationale and multi-year phased-in approach for local governments in Prince George's County to obtain planning and zoning authority. Council directed staff to move forward in both directions – negotiations with the planning commission and the legislative route.

Other Business

Council heard a request from Kelly Ivey to renovate the Northway athletic fields. He said they need to be reorganized for Greenbelt teams to make the best use of them. Council asked Ivey to put his ideas in writing so that they could be referred to and considered by the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board.

Council endorsed a request by councilmember Tom White that the city join in efforts to contact federal legislators to encourage passage of homeland security legislation and to make resources available to cities and towns for emergency preparedness.

At Patuxent Gallery

Dr. Ron Brunsvold will be the featured artist for November in the Hollingsworth Art Gallery at the National Wildlife Visitor Center. His photography has taken him over most of North America, from the Southwestern deserts to the far southern oceans and Antarctica. His images represent wildlife as it naturally occurs, sometimes humorous, sometimes dramatic and always interesting.

The National Wildlife Visitor Center on Powder Mill Rd. is open daily from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Labor Day Festival 2002

Greenbelt's Labor Day Festivals create lasting memories for all who participate. Often, there are a great many stories and photos that never make it to press due to space limitations. The News Review is happy to be able to share these recollections from the 2002 Labor Day Festival with its readers.

Annual Pet Show Was a Roaring Success

by Theresa Henderson

Once again, the annual pet show organized by the Cadette Girl Scouts of Greenbelt was a roaring success. The Exotic Pet category was dominated by turtles and birds. The Best in Show award went to A.J., a cockatiel owned by Carrie Heimpel. Second place was awarded to Ben, a box turtle owned by Dina Goldberg-Strassler; Dina's other turtle, Tzav, took the "Prettiest Shell" award. Third place went to Blue Max, a parakeet owned by Steven Henderson. A community family donated a $5 cash award for Best in Show. Safeway donated toys and treats for the other awardees.

Small Mammals

Best in Show and "Most Exotic" went to Andy, a rabbit owned by Caitlin Cummings, winning a $5 cash award donated by a community family. Second place and "Most Dramatic" was won by Walnut, a guinea pig owned by Nicole Shuman. Third place and "Prettiest" went to Ruth, a rabbit owned by Steven Henderson. Other awardees included: Hammie (Manaar Zuhurdeen's hamster) "Fluffiest," Bambi (Niroshi Wijeweera's gerbil) "Best Looking," Ruby (Kiersten Meyer's rabbit) "Happiest," Fred (Cotter Rosenberg's guinea pig) "Best Color," and Lightning (Brian Faherty's hamster) "Smallest." Treats and toys donated by Safeway were received by the winners.

Cats

Peepers took Best in Show by a hair in the Cats category. Owner Joel Mason-Gaines was purrfectly pleased with the $20 Gift Certificate donated by Greenbelt Co-op Grocery Store. Lucy, a three time champion owned by Madeline and Steven Henderson, had to settle for second place and some yummy treats donated by Safeway.

Dogs

Dogs abounded in the largest category of pets. Rocky, "Most Loved," owned by Walter and Annina Commins, ran away with Best in Show and a $25 check donated by Girl Scout Troop 127. Carmen, "Best Traveled," owned by the Lemieux family, placed second. Dakota, "Prettiest Eyes" owned by Pat Routt, placed third. Other awards went to Ozzie (Sarah Roper) "Well Bathed," Susie (Jake Fletcher) "Best Tail," Jasmine (Joyce Nelson) "Best Office Assistant," Kibbles (Marcy Smith) "Best Behaved," Lily (Rachel Bailey) "Best Cat Wrestler," Angel (Kristel, Billy) "Most Protective," Ukelele (Ronica Pivano) "Best Dressed," Linus (Ethan Cowan) "Best Named," Alice (Brian Faherty) "Prettiest," Alli (Carrie Heimpel) "Best Trick," and Casey (Dina Goldberg-Strassler) "Best Listener."

The Greenbelt Girl Scouts thank everyone who contributed to this event: the Labor Day Festival Committee for ribbons, set-up and clean-up, Greenbelt Co-op and Safeway for prize donations, community families for donations and, of course, the fabulous pets that everyone could meet and enjoy. See you next year!

Adult Winners

The wide range of Greenbelt's photographic interests were ably demonstrated in entries in 12 adult and 10 young photographer categories in the 2002 Labor Day Photo Show. Always a favorite topic, My Greenbelt was chosen as a subject by Barry Bordas (1st and 3rd), Linda Sladys (2nd), and Eva Choper (4th), while the Landscape category attracted the attention of Jim Robertson (1st), Michelle Pixley (2nd), Kelly Rich (3rd) and Barbara Brown (4th). In the specialized Sunrise/Sunset Landscape category, first honors went to Jim Parker, closely followed by Steven Mirsky and then Mullaney/Barott with L. Samuel Martz coming in at fourth place.

People and Pets - perennial favorites - shared three categories. Jean Snyder, Norma Belt, Amy Hansen and Ginger Brown took first through fourth places respectively in photographing children. Hansen also won the Adult/Families category, followed by Steven Mirsky and Jean Snyder. Furry, scaly, and feathered friends were ably immortalized by Manuel P. Lopez, Jr., Joseph Lomax, Eileen Connolly and Lee Ann van Leer who took first through fourth places in the Pets and Animals category.

In the Building and Architecture section, laurels went to Frank Coursen with Kelly Rich, T. Kemp and Doug Sappington shadowing him. The action captured by Nona Campbell-Thomas and Lee Ann van Leer, who took first and second places in the Sports and Photojournalism section, contrasted with the careful composition of the Still Life/Pictorial/Abstract photography of Jacqueline Tull (1st), Scott La Cross (2nd), Ronnie Scotkin (3rd) and Rachel Mirsky (4th).

Greenbelters' fondness for flowers was shown in photographs by Jim Robertson, Trevor Siegel, Norma Belt and Linda Sladys in first through fourth places in the Flowers category. The perpetually itchy feet of our town's citizens were documented by Janet Mirsky, Barbara Payne, Ginger Brown and Elizabeth Gaines who took the honors for Travel photography.

Four entrants earned places in the Proud America category. Rachel Mirsky (1st), Anne Cromwell (2nd), Margaret Smith (3rd) and Bernadette Murphy (4th) all chose to comment pictorially on this nation's proud heritage and in the process earned plaudits for themselves.

Young Photographers

Peter and Ellie Lomax had winning entries in the Travel and Architecture sections respectively, and Katherine Zevallos was triumphant in the Proud America and Sports photography areas. Amber Creamer won both the Still Life and Children categories, though Anna Flynn took a first place in Sunrise/Sunset and 2nd in Flowers. Elisa Flynn took two seconds in Pets and Animals. Joel Mason-Gaines was the clear standout in Landscapes and also trumped in Pets and Animals. Kelsey Robertson placed second in Pets and Animals, and Clara Beckert's two pictures on the topic of children won first and second places respectively.

Community Favorites

In the grand tradition of the festival, the public voted for their favorite pictures. First place in this coveted category went to Doug Sappington for his landscape entitled "Serenity," second place went to Trevor Siegel for "Butterfly at Rest," and third place to Jacqueline Tull for her entry in the People and Families category.

Senior Open Forum Reveals Concerns

The Senior Citizen Open Forum was held on September 28 at the Community Center. Chair Jackie Shabe-Rochefort opened the meeting by introducing Betty Timer who gave a brief history of the committee, which was started in 1988 and listed some of its accomplishments. Among these are the "Not for Seniors Only" series, GIVES, Adult Day Care, the bridge over the creek leading to the lake, the Assisted Living Task Force and the Resource Advocate.

The purpose of the forum is to learn about issues important to seniors and to answer questions about problems they may have. Transportation issues were particularly difficult for many of those attending. For those living at the Green Ridge House, transportation is needed for the shopping centers, the movies or places outside Greenbelt. The Greenbelt Connection does not go to the Orange Metro Line, often misses scheduled weekend dates and does not call back until Monday.

Some suggested solutions were offered such as using the Zip Car for Green Ridge House with GIVES volunteer drivers; using "The Bus;" using the recreation van, getting a group together to use a cab and using county taxicab vouchers.

Another topic of great interest was forming a Greenbelt bereavement group possibly with the help of AARP. Leonie Penney and Pearl Siegel are bereavement facilitators and will assist in starting a local group. Leah Warner suggested getting help from Hospice, which will provide individual and group counseling.

Ruth Edwards asked if the city has an emergency program. Mayor Judith Davis said the city police are working on it with other police and fire departments and the Council of Governments in order to plan evacuations. A First Alert Radio will be used by the county to give warnings on all problems such as hurricanes or terrorists.

Despite other problems with speeders and drivers who ignore stop signs, everyone agreed that Greenbelt is a great place to live.

Mikulski Asks For Applications

Senator Barbara A. Mikulski (D-MD) encourages students to consider applying to one of the five US Service Academies: Air Force, Coast Guard, Merchant Marines, Military and Naval.

"Service academies are among the top schools in the country," said Senator Mikulski. "Through rigorous course work and discipline, they prepare students for the challenge of becoming America's future leaders. As a United States Senator, I consider it a great honor to nominate young men and women each year to serve our country in one of the service academies."

Competition for academy appointments is intense among Maryland high school seniors. Applicants must have a nomination and an offer of appointment to gain entry into any one of the service academies. The US Coast Guard Academy is the only one not requiring a nomination from a member of Congress. Seniors interested in applying to a US Service Academy should contact the Academy directly to obtain admission information. Maryland students should also contact Senator Mikulski or another member of the state's Congressional delegation for information.

Each year Senator Mikulski nominates 10 students for each academy vacancy. The academy then makes an offer of appointment to as many those nominees as space permits.

Students interested in applying for a nomination from the Senator should write to her Annapolis office at 60 West Street, Suite 202, Annapolis, MD 21401. Students can also visit her website at mikulski.senate.gov and click on the Service Academy link. All completed nomination applications must be received by Friday, November 8.

The Greenbelt News Review held its annual meeting on October 27 at its offices in the Community Center. Following a review of the paper's activities, problems and finances and the re-election of all members of the board of directors and officers, those attending enjoyed a buffet supper.

Brother James Sommers Recalls A Long Life and Early Days Here

by Marat Moore

It's less than two hours by car from the green umbrellas dotting Roosevelt Center to the quiet expanse of the Shenandoah River near Berryville, Va., where Brother James Sommers lives as a Cistercian monk at Holy Cross Abbey.

Brother James, as he is known at Holy Cross, tends the abbey's gift shop and greets retreatants who come to the abbey for a respite of silence, prayer and worship. At the five daily services, all but one – the 3:30 a.m. vigil – feature the haunting beauty of chanted psalms. Since silence is a valued aspect of their practice, the monks do not interact with guests, with the exception of those who operate the gift shop and retreat house.

During a retreat, Brother James greeted me in the gift shop and asked where I was from. "The Washington area," I replied vaguely, then added, "well actually, Greenbelt."

"Greenbelt!" His blue eyes danced as he told me about living at 9-M Ridge Road, where his family had moved to Greenbelt as pioneers in 1938. Born in 1922, he was around 16 when he arrived with his parents and brothers Bill, Bob and Dick. The family had moved from Pennsylvania to Alexandria, Va., in 1932 when his father took a job as a machinist at the Washington Navy Yard.

Now 80, he says that

Brother James greets those who come to Holy Cross Abbey for a respite.

well." He also admired Gehrig for being "a very fair player."

World War II

That sense of fair play, instilled by his parents – "they were very strong in respecting other people and their beliefs" – deepened into an awareness of injustice in the late 1930s when he noticed the local repercussions of Germany's expanding Nazi regime.

"We had a very nice teacher who was Jewish. But one student from Berwyn was for Hitler and made comments. She didn't get angry, but she was hurt," he recalls.

"We also had neighbors in 9 Court, a young couple. This was the time that Hitler invaded Russia and they were Russian Jews who had relatives living in the path of the attack."

When America entered World War II, all four Sommers boys joined the armed services – each choosing a different branch of the military. "Dick enlisted in the Marines, Bob became a paratrooper, Bill went into the Navy and I went into the infantry," Sommers says. Only three came home. Bill died in the Pacific.

His mother, Ann, received the news of her son's death on her birthday. "It was so sad," he recalls. She became one of Greenbelt's "Gold Star" mothers and Bill's name is listed on the World War II monument at Roosevelt Center. Sommers' father, a World War I veteran, his mother, and Bill are all buried at Arlington Cemetery.

It was after the war and a stint working for the Treasury Department in Washington and Chicago that James felt the call to serve God in a religious community. He entered one religious order in Hyattsville, but decided against it. Later a friend recommended the books of the Cistercian monk Thomas Merton, and "I was hooked," he says. Sommers entered the Gethsemene monastery in Kentucky, where Merton lived, in 1952. Around the same time the government sold Greenbelt and his parents moved to Hyattsville.

Life as a Monk

At Gethsemene Brother James saw Merton but never spoke to him, in keeping with the community's strict vow of silence. In 1955 he traveled to California with other monks to open a new monastery in the Sacramento Valley. He lived there for 13 years before moving to Holy Cross in 1968.

Living in the Shenandoah Valley supported Sommers' abiding interest in the Civil War, which he had first researched to learn about the war experiences of his great-grandfather. At Holy Cross he discovered that a Civil War battle had been fought on the property and began to dig – literally – into the past.

With a metal detector, he began to carefully search the field near the river and found a trove of Civil War artifacts from the Battle of Cool Spring. He unearthed pieces of shrapnel, stirrups, buttons from Union uniforms and other items. Later he meticulously researched the history of the battle using resources from the National Archives and Library of Congress.

Then as he continued to search the field, another layer of history emerged – one much older and shrouded in mystery. He spotted stone arrowheads and contacted archeologist Bill Gardner from the Thunderbird Museum in Front Royal. Together they found numerous arrowheads and dug out hammerstones, notched axe heads, chopping tools and other evidence of a community that lived there more than 10,000 years ago. The oldest artifact is a "Dalton point" dating from 8,500 B.C.

"We don't know much about these people, only that they were Paleo-Indians and hunter-gatherers," says Sommers.

The result of his efforts, which took more than a decade, are now on display in the original 1784 mansion on the monastery grounds.

Brother James also keeps up with the more recent history of Greenbelt. He reads the News Review each week and comes to town to visit with his brother Bob and with friends who live on Southway. "They took me to the New Deal Café. I liked it!" he says, adding that he's looking forward to coming to Greenbelt next May for a reunion for several high school classes – including his Class of 1941.

Listening, it occurred to me that both communities – one secular, one religious – were created with a strong sense of purpose and embodied the cooperative life. Both also were wrapped in green space, if only in the early years, in the case of Greenbelt.
