

Council Response Is Tentative To Proposed FY10 City Budget

by Thomas X. White

Traditionally the first council worksession on the budget covers a general budget overview, a review of expected revenue experience and predictions for the coming fiscal year. Many of these are dependent on estimates by the State Comptroller's office. The session also is to review the General Government portion of the budget, which includes personnel (staffing), administration (city manager's office), elections, finance and administration services, information technology, legal counsel, public information and community promotion and public officers associations.

At the start of the worksession, however, on Monday, March 30 Mayor Judith Davis asked councilmembers if they had initial thoughts or comments on the proposed budget presented to them a week earlier by City Manager Michael McLaughlin at the March 23 regular meeting. At that time only the mayor had offered a comment following the manager's presentation, in just one word – "sobering."

Now other councilmembers provided their assessment; they were just as reserved and tentative as in the mayor's brief reaction.

Councilmember Leta Mach indicated she was glad the manager included the past year's visioning results as a key factor in developing the proposed budget. Further, she noted, "How we can fund programs related to the realization of the visioning goals will be a challenge."

Councilmember Konrad Herling stated he had no predetermined goal at this stage but looking for ways to raise revenue other than through taxes should be explored. He reiterated his proposals for council consideration of hiring a grants coordinator and/or a marketing director. He emphasized that those proposals should be viewed as a future approach to enhance the city's ability to raise revenue other than through taxes.

Councilmember Edward Putens indicated he was willing to explore Herling's proposals. As he was the councilmember who, prior to the budget presentation, had suggested the manager include in his proposed budget departmental recommendations for a 1 percent, 3 percent and 5 percent reduction from the prior year's budget, he said that council needs to evaluate those scenarios now.

Moving beyond her previous

"sobering" position, Davis used the opportunity to expand on her budget assessment, saying that she was glad the proposed budget held the line (on the tax rate) and that no employees were laid off. She would like to look for ways, she said, to keep the contract post office facility open. She noted, however, that she was not sure why residents were not using it more as an alternative. She also will be looking to see if city departments were evaluating cutbacks and other savings in their budgets.

Manager Speaks

McLaughlin then began his traditional educational treatment of the budget document, using handouts to highlight important information to evaluate and compare past budgets with the proposed Fiscal Year 2010 budget. These handouts were taken directly from the budget document or extracted from it.

One is the General Fund Summary (page 15) in the budget document. McLaughlin used his highlighted version to walk council through the evolution of the current status of the city's fund balance from Fiscal Years

St. Hugh's Enrollment Drop Raises Concerns for the Parish

by Mary Moien

In response to a letter sent to all St. Hugh's Church parishioners, Grenoble Hall was filled for a meeting on March 31 to discuss the future of St. Hugh's School. Reverend Walter Tappe, pastor, led the meeting with input from Tiffani James, school principal, and two representatives from the Archdiocese of Washington.

Tappe described the decrease in children in Greenbelt and in the county. He said that enrollment at the school has been in a decline since 2002. He pointed to the proposed closing of several county elementary schools in the near future.

In addition, at the end of the last school year, two long-time teachers and the principal left the school – one retired, one moved, and one took a different position in another school. The turnover has added some stress to the school but Tappe emphasized that standardized test scores have remained high.

In the 2002-03 school year the school had 243 students. Since then, the numbers have decreased each year. The school had 178 students at the beginning of this school year. The school recently asked parents to pre-register their children for the next school year.

Only 122 new and returning students are registered to date, although there was hope that additional registrations from new and returning families would pick up in the weeks and months ahead. Although school tuition could be an issue during the economic downturn, Tappe mentioned that no parish child had ever been turned away for lack of money.

Tappe indicated that with a decreased enrollment, the need would increase for monies provided from the parish fund. It would be possible, he said, that funds would be exhausted in only two or three years.

Since 2007, parishioners have been providing about $60,000 per year in extra donations to support the school. He wanted the parish to be fully aware of the situation. Immediate as well as long-term decisions need to be made, he said. The meeting was then thrown open to the audience for comments and ideas.

Discussion

It was obvious from the speakers that both current school parents and parishioners whose children had long since graduated were represented. Virtually all who addressed the group were firm in their desire to do all possible to keep the school open.

Some parents wanted to address specific teacher issues and why some students have left in mid-year, apparently those in the upper grades. Without going into specifics, Tappe assured all concerned that the issues were being dealt with appropriately.

Major issues centered on how to increase enrollment and how to raise funds to keep the school running. It was suggested that the parish investigate bringing the weekly bingo game back and possibly renting out Grenoble Hall for activities.

The use of volunteers in past years was mentioned. At the end, smaller focused meetings to discuss outreach and funding were set for April 7 and 8.

At all of the weekend masses Tappe relayed a summary of the meeting and asked parishioners to pledge money for 2009 to keep the school open. Suggestions from the community can be mailed or dropped off at the rectory.

Scientist Eugenia Kalnay Works Globally and Locally

by Anne Carroll

Eugenia Kalnay may seem like just an ordinary resident of Greenbelt. Like many of us, she loves the community resources and the location, particularly because it allows her to bike to work. In fact, she came to Greenbelt because of her commute – she moved here from Takoma Park, drawn by the easy bike ride to her job at the University of Maryland, where she is a Distinguished University Professor in the Department of Atmospheric and Oceanic Sciences.

That position suggests the way that Dr. Kalnay is not just an ordinary Greenbelt resident; instead, she is a world-renowned meteorologist who, through her work to increase the accuracy of weather forecasts, has made major contributions to the National Weather Service and her field in general.

In a nutshell, Kalnay explains, her work involves developing computer models of the atmosphere which allow scientists to predict the weather, particularly by integrating observations of daily weather into the models. Related to that is a focus on climate change, as well as the study of the interaction between the oceans and the atmosphere.

Personal Life

Kalnay almost went a different direction with her studies. She was born and raised in Buenos Aires, where she went to college. She expected to study physics but, while she was on vacation one year, her mother discovered a competition for scholarships in meteorology through the National Weather Service in Argentina, and she changed Kalnay's major on her college application. "When I came back from summer vacation," she says, "I had changed careers!"

Kalnay found that she was happy with the change –

both because she was glad to be involved in the competition (which awarded her a full-ride scholarship to the University of Buenos Aires) but also because she soon found that she loved meteorology. "It's a wonderful science," she says. "It's like doing physics but in a way that really helps mankind." That is particularly the case now, as the importance of understanding and addressing climate change becomes more and more acute.

Meteorology also is a science, Kalnay adds, that has "no frontiers." Because meteorologists measure the atmosphere through weather balloons and satellites, national boundaries are irrelevant; in fact, she says, meteorology really is a "world field."

Kalnay came to the United States to study for her PhD at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which she received in 1971. She was "quite surprised," she says, to find herself the first woman to receive that degree in that field from MIT. "In Argentina, women were quite active in all of the professions," she explains. "About 40 percent of the people in my field when I was an undergraduate were women; I expected that number to be about 50 percent when I got to MIT but I was

Bravo GAC!

An outstanding production of Amadeus. Really superb! Indeed, considering space restraints, it was nothing short of a truly great production.

Thank you to everyone concerned. A wonderful evening's entertainment. Well done!

Great Shows

My husband and I had the pleasure of attending two superb performances recently, one by a creative artist in Greenbelt and the other at the Greenbelt Arts Center. The MFA dance thesis by Angella Foster at the Clarice Smith Performing Arts Center moved me to tears by the spare eloquence of Foster's spoken narrative and her powerful choreography performed by a group of young dancers. Foster told the story of the women in her Kentucky family, their struggles and their ability to nurture life despite great adversity. Greenbelt is lucky to have Foster in our creative midst.

We also squeezed into the final show of Amadeus at the GAC, with Mozart's music performed live and riveting acting. No wonder it was sold out.

What a joy to live in this town!

Next P&J Film Is "War Made Easy"

The community is invited to see and discuss this well-received documentary based on the book by the same title on Sunday, April 19 at 3:30 p.m. in the Greenbelt Community Center, 15 Crescent Road.

By familiarizing viewers with the techniques of war propaganda, 'War Made Easy' encourages viewers to think critically about the messages put out by today's spin doctors – messages which are designed to promote and prolong a policy of militarism under the guise of the 'war on terror.'" Solomon is the author of several books and of a weekly nationally syndicated column on media and politics, Media Beat. Cyril H. Femrite

After a 7-1/2 year battle with cancer, Cyril Hamilton Femrite, 83, died peacefully at his home in Frederick, Md., on April 1, 2009, surrounded by family. He handled his illness with courage, dignity and his usual positive attitude, living years beyond all expectations.

Mr. Femrite was born in Monona, Wisc., on December 18, 1925, one of five children to Helmer Olai Femrite and Edith Hamilton Femrite. After graduating from Wisconsin High School, Mr. Femrite served in the US Navy as a radioman during WWII and later graduated with high honors from Harvard University in 1947, earning a B.A. in political science.

"Cy" and "Gini" Femrite were married in April 1965 and lived in Greenbelt for 42 years. Mr. Femrite worked as an air traffic controller and in the executive branch of the Federal Aviation Administration for 34 years. He and Gini enjoyed many summers at their camp on Limekiln Lake in the Adirondack Mountains of upstate New York. He was active there in the senior tennis group and played tennis regularly until the age of 80. He also enjoyed canoeing, sailing, hiking, playing bridge and poker, watching any and all sports, classical music, playing Yahtzee with his daughter Nancy, having lunch "with the boys" at Pier 7, gardening, cooking chili, fish chowder and the Norwegian dish "Lutefisk and Lefsa" and sipping on a dry martini.

Mr. Femrite is survived by his wife Virginia; daughter Leslie Bair of Frederick; daughter Annette and husband Bob Kerr of Frederick; daughter Nancy and husband Randy Femrite of Leesburg, Va.; brother Allyn Femrite, many dear nieces and nephews, grandchildren Corey, Sean and Ryan Bair; Ashley Maynard, Erik Femrite; and great-grandson Addison Maynard.

Cy will be missed and remembered by all who knew him.

A memorial service, officiated by the Rev. Dr. James S. Flora was held on Saturday, April 4 at the Keeney and Basford Funeral Home in Frederick. Interment was private. Expressions of sympathy may be sent to www.keeneybasford.com.

In lieu of flowers, memorial donations may be made to Hospice of Frederick County, P.O. Box 1799, Frederick, MD 21702-1799.

Greenbelters were saddened to learn of the death of 42-year Greenbelt resident Cyril Femrite in Frederick on April 1, 2009.

Congratulations to:

Her sister Doreen Flood lived on Ridge Road; Doreen's daughter Angel was a member of the Greenbelt Swim Team.

— Jean and Ed Cook on the birth of their sixth granddaughter, Eva Simone, on March 11, 2009. The new baby is the first child for Dr. Michael Cook and Dr. Jennifer Cook of Tampa, Fla.

In the "It's a small world" Department: Greenbelters on the Recreation Department trip to the new National Harbor enjoyed a chat at the Visitors Center with a charming young woman, LaKeisha Hagler, who revealed that she attended Greenbelt Elementary School when it was housed in our present Community Center. Now a customer service representative with the Harbor staff, she remembered fondly her teachers Mrs. O'Connor, Mrs. Sturgill and Mrs. Lubetski.

What is the Bahá'í Faith and who do Baha'is follow?
The Bahá'í Faith is a world religion whose purpose is to unite all the races and peoples in one universal cause and one common faith. Bahá'is are the followers of Bahá'u'lláh (1817-1892), who they believe is the Promised One of all ages. He said:
"That which the Lord hath ordained as the sovereign remedy and mightiest instrument for the healing of all the world is the union of all its peoples in one universal Cause, one common Faith."

2007 through 2009 and what he proposes for FY10.

This year he demonstrates that in FY08, the city made a good effort to achieve a fund balance at the desired level of approximately 10 percent of city overall expenditures for the year; however, for FY09 the percentage drifted back below the 10 percent level. His proposed budget is predicated on restoring the undesignated fund balance to the optimum 10 percent level, he said, designed to assure that the city could weather a severe fiscal downturn. For FY10 the recommended fund balance is $2,543,037.

McLaughlin used a highlighted copy of page 21 of the budget to explain that although the estimated property tax assessment (all properties) for FY10 will total nearly $2.5 billion or 13.2 percent over that of FY09 the actual increase for the city is 8.1 percent due to the application of the state-mandated Homestead Credit ($381,555,000), the city's Homeowners Credit ($3,816,800) and Real Property Tax Abatements ($50,890,600).

He also noted that the Homestead Credit is approaching 16 percent of the total assessment for Greenbelt. He said that issue would need to be explored with state officials as to what it means for the future.

He also noted that the Homestead Credit excess ($2,999,000 for FY10) represents a kind of cushion for the city revenue capacity if the reassessments for 2009-2011 were to drop precipitously – a sort of good news for the city, bad news for the property owner scenario.

Revenue Sources

The next handout was a two-page description of all sources of revenue for the city and the city staff's best estimate for what levels of income from the various sources the city might expect to fund the FY10 budget. The lead paragraph reads: "Reviewing proposed FY 2010 revenues, you will notice that many . . . have been kept at FY 2009 levels. The reason for this is that staff is hopeful that the current recession may find a bottom in calendar year 2009."

The largest revenue source for the city is property taxes. For FY10 the percentage for all property taxes is 68 percent (real estate and personal property). By itself real estate taxes account for 61 percent of all revenues.

Abatements for corporate taxes are budgeted for $400,000 in FY10, up from $260,000 in FY09. The information provided to council indicated that one of the office buildings in Capital Office Park lost its major tenant last year and that could result in a tax abatement and lower revenues. Current market conditions could cause tax abatements of concern for other commercial property in the city as well.

Another source of revenue is state-shared taxes. Included in this category are the state income tax paid by Greenbelt residents, hotel/motel receipts, admissions and amusement taxes and highway user taxes. Income tax revenue for the city declined 3.0 percent in FY08 and is tracking nearly 1 percent lower for FY09.

The proposed budget keeps the FY10 level the same as the estimated receipts in FY09. Likewise, staff is projecting the hotel/motel and admission/amusement taxes at the FY09 level.

A more risky projection is for the city's expected share in FY10 of Maryland highway user taxes. The FY10 budget proposes an amount that is $100,000 lower than that for FY09. There is concern, however, that actions taken by the Maryland General Assembly late in the current legislative session that ends next week may reduce this expected revenue source more drastically.

Other Sources

The rest of city revenue sources are also feeling the impact of the recession and fiscal crisis.

Proposed revenue projections for those accounts, such as service charges, fines and forfeitures and interest are either being kept level or decreased. For FY10, the handout summarizes the situation with the statement: "the increase from real estate taxes accounts for all of the (revenue) increase in FY10. Real estate taxes (less abatements, homestead and homeowner credits) are estimated to increase $1,389,400 and all other revenue sources are proposed to decline by $142,600."

With such a constraint council seems interested in looking at every line item in the budget. The manager helps them in that task by extracting from the printed budget document a complete listing of every single line item for general fund expenditures, including salaries and benefits, fixed operating costs, variable operating costs and fund transfers and contributions to reserves.

Yet another handout was a March 27 memo from the city manager to council labeled "Budget Stuff." This consisted of an explanation for the staff recommendation to close the contract postal facility at the Municipal Building, citing the limited usage by an average of 12-14 visitors per day at an annual cost of $20,000 per year. It also contained a rationale to calculate the Consumer Price Index (CPI) for the past year and the manager's decision to use another method to arrive at a recommended 1 percent CPI level rather than 4.5 percent for city classified employees not subject to the collective bargaining agreement between the city and the Greenbelt Fraternal Order of Police.

Also included were a brief discussion of a Greenbelt in Focus proposal on which the manager is requesting direction from council and a staff analysis of funding needs for various city reserve funds based upon a process developed at the time of the FY05 budget hearings. This process has failed to meet the projected goals, making the plan not useful, he said.

These items were briefly discussed but were generally left for subsequent discussion and/or possible action by council. Council raised questions regarding the collective bargaining agreement in terms of its fairness, as well as the upcoming discussion of the city employee classification plan scheduled for April 13.

Questions were also raised regarding the city department's efforts at energy use reduction and savings. McLaughlin noted that he has not really tasked the departments in those areas and was relying on a more comprehensive approach. With the proposed staffing addition at the Department of Public Works for an energy coordinator, FY10 should result in such a plan, he pointed out.

Related somewhat to this topic, the mayor expressed disappointment with the staff response to the recent Earth Hour global promotion. She felt there could have been more effort for city participation in the attempt to reduce lighting during the Earth Hour one-hour period calling for lights out. Councilmembers agreed.

Further Reviews

Several other items were raised by councilmembers during a page-by-page review of the General Government portion of the budget:

Staff and council need to make sure that organizations requesting the city install their promotional banners should be prepared to provide banners for all three areas of the city. Staff is considering appropriate locations for event banners in Greenbelt East and will present recommendations to council.

What is the status of the proposed roundabout construction at the intersection of Cherrywood Lane and Metro Access Drive? The manager explained that the responsible developer has defaulted on the contribution to fund the roundabout and staff is investigating city options with the bondholders.

What would be the impact if the city contracted out the pick-up of trash and recyclables throughout the city? Is the city's trash and recycle service competitive with contractors that perform the service for some Greenbelt neighborhoods? It was agreed that such a question required a lot more information and thought.

The city's Public Information and Community Promotion Office was applauded for the recent introduction of video streaming of council meetings, making the meeting available via internet for those who do not have cable service.

What is the status of the overtime situation with police dispatchers? The manager indicated that vacant slots are being filled.

Not satisfied that council had enough handouts, Davis closed the worksession by asking the manager for two additional handouts prepared in previous years: analysis of the impact of real estate assessments by project/housing type and a chart providing comparable tax rates for other jurisdictions in Prince George's County.

surprised by the lack of women in the graduate program.”

After she graduated she came to the Washington, D.C., area to work at NASA, where she was a senior scientist and then a branch head at the Goddard Space Flight Center and where she earned the NASA Medal for Exceptional Scientific Achievement.

While she was there, she ran a personal ad in the Washingtonian magazine. One of the respondents was Malise Dick, an economist from Scotland who worked for the World Bank. Shortly, Kalnay decided he was “the one for me!” He proved to be a wonderful, supportive husband, she says. They had been married for 28 years when he died of a heart attack in 2007.

She was helped through that difficult time by her son from her first marriage, Jorge Rivas, who lives in Minneapolis. “He was very helpful,” she says, “but he’s also just a wonderful person!”

Professional Development

In the meantime, Kalnay spent 10 years as the director of the Environmental Modeling Center (EMC) of the National Centers of Environmental Protection. It provides computer models to the National Weather Service (NWS), which is a branch of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. When she started at the EMC in 1987, she says, the NWS in the United States was “way behind” services in other parts of the world. By the time she left in 1997 the NWS was far more on par with services elsewhere.

Kalnay received two gold medals from the Department of Commerce while she worked at EMC, one for her work as director of the center, particularly her efforts to make its forecasts more accurate and the other for her development of a program that analyzed data on the atmosphere over the past 60 years. This program has become the most widely used data system in the field; a paper that she wrote about it in 1996 has become the most cited paper in the geosciences.

Kalnay’s work also was recognized by her selection, in 1996, as a member of the National Academy of Engineering (NAE). Members and associates are chosen by their peers; selection signifies being among the world’s most accomplished engineers, according to the NAE. In addition to more than 100 peer reviewed papers, Kalnay wrote a book, Atmospheric Modeling, Data Assimilation and Predictability, which was published in 2002 by Cambridge University Press and has become a best seller in its field, has gone through four printings and has even been translated into Chinese.

In 1997 she left EMC to become the Robert E. Lowry Chair in Meteorology at the University of Oklahoma in Norman. But she missed the Washington, D.C., area and when she had the opportunity to move to the University of Maryland she and her husband were happy to return. Kalnay joined Maryland’s Department of Meteorology (now the Department of Atmospheric and Oceanic Science) in 1999.

Current Work

At Maryland, Kalnay teaches only graduate students with whom she says she loves to work, particularly because she values the opportunity to nurture young scientists, many of whom have moved on to careers of their own. Her friend Maggie Cahalan emphasizes that she spends a great deal of time mentoring her students. “She’s really, really strong at providing mentoring and intellectual stimulation for them,” Cahalan says.

Kalnay also is committed to helping students move through the graduate program as efficiently as possible. She was chair of the department for three years, and one of her focuses was on revamping the curriculum to allow people to move through the program more quickly. Maryland, which is one of 20 or 30 universities to offer graduate degrees in meteorology, is “near the top of the pack” in its field, she reports.

Kalnay’s work at the university was honored when she was named Distinguished University Professor in 2001. She also received Maryland’s 2006 Kirwin Award and she was granted the first Eugenia Brin Endowed Professorship in Data Assimilation in 2008.

One of her recent accomplishments involved a major workshop in Buenos Aires in October 2008, which was “very successful,” Kalnay says and that success made her very happy. She was glad to help make the contribution to the University of Buenos Aires, she explains, because “I got an incredibly good education for free there and I would like to pay them back in some way.” The university returned the favor, awarding Eugenia its highest honor, a doctorate honoris causa.

Greenbelt Activities

Despite her amazingly busy and productive professional life, Kalnay makes time to be a very active part of Greenbelt and the surrounding communities. Cahalan calls her “an active person who does a lot in the community,” including “working very hard for peace causes,” tutoring for a program for children of immigrants in Langley Park and serving as a board member for CHEARS, the Chesapeake Education, Arts and Research Society. Clearly she is someone who sets a wonderful example of working toward positive change both globally and locally.

Observatory Dedication Draws a Bead on the Sky

by Doug Love and Martha Gay

Saturday afternoon, April 4 saw the dedication of the City of Greenbelt Observatory. In true Greenbelt spirit, the recycled dome (a gift from Montgomery Community College) sits atop Observatory Hill at Northway Fields surrounded by a recycled asphalt surface. Astronomical Society of Greenbelt members Carol Beigel (with grandson Benjamin Russell), George Gliba and the writers worked to the last minute to ready the dome, install red rope lights and clean and test everything.

Installed in the dome is a 14-inch Mead Memorial telescope, named in honor of Jaylee and Gilbert Mead – early and generous supporters of the observatory and former Greenbelt residents, both of whom worked for many years at Goddard Space Flight Center.

Twenty-nine people signed the guest book and an estimated 33 attended some part of the ceremonies. Mayor Judith Davis spoke of her earliest recollections of the sky – being shown constellations by her parents. She noted that having an observatory has brought to the city council a new awareness of the importance of properly designed outdoor lighting.

Representing County Councilmember Ingrid Turner, Bob Doyle extended congratulations to the city and to the Astronomical Society. Longtime Greenbelt residents Doug Love and George Gliba recalled the early days of the Astronomical Society and acquisition of the dome and telescope.

Jaylee Mead was unable to attend in person but sent her congratulations and best wishes. The big surprise of the day was the gift of a Sky Atlas 2000 from Gary Hand of Hands on Optics in Damascus, Md. Tours of the dome followed.

Many more visitors, including a Cub Scout pack, came to the star party, cosponsored by the Goddard Astronomy Club, on Saturday evening. A steady stream of people climbed into the dome to view celestial objects such as the Moon and Saturn until 11 p.m. A second star party on Sunday, also held jointly with the Goddard Astronomy Club, drew a somewhat smaller but equally enthusiastic audience.

The Astronomical Society hopes to open the dome to the public on a regular basis on clear nights. It also will be available for special occasions by appointment.

Doug Love and Martha Gay are members of the Astronomical Society of Greenbelt.

Springhill Lake Arsonist Gets Eight Years in Prison

by Karl B. Hille

Setting more than nine fires in a five-month “terror spree” in Springhill Lake Apartments in 2007 netted Jeremiah Christopher Jones eight years in prison and three years supervised release during his sentencing before U.S. District Court Judge Alexander Williams, Jr., on April 2.

Prosecutors sought 12 years, calling Jones a menace who “will burn again” and referring to the five-month period of burnings as a “terror spree” designed to inflict the most damage, bypass sprinkler systems and hit when people were asleep.

“He kept setting fires to occupied buildings week after week,” said Assistant U.S. Attorney James Crowell.

In return for psychological treatment, Jones pleaded guilty to setting nine fires.

Defense attorney Paula Xinis agreed Jones deserved to be punished but argued the worst of the fires would not have caused millions in loss and damages if the apartments were built to code.

Laying groundwork for a compensation hearing June 29, she called fire prevention expert Dale Wheeler to testify that shoddy construction played a role in the $1 million-plus damages estimated from the first fire at 9150 Edmonston Road.

With appropriate fire stops in the utilities shafts, the fire would not have spread from the basement laundry room through to the attic, Wheeler said. Other fires set by Jones burned out quickly after smoldering in the enclosed spaces where he left rags, stuffed animals or old clothing burning.

“That kind of fire would burn very poorly, probably smolder for a period of time,” Wheeler said.

“There’s not a good chance if you’re trying to set a fire. Many of these locations would end up oxygen-limited.”

Most fires did exactly that, he said, with damage estimates set at $500, according to court records.

“The difference between $500 and more than a million dollars damage is like the difference between apples and rocket fuel,” Xinis said.

Jones sat still through the hearing, occasionally tapping his fingertips on the glass tabletop or bouncing a knee as fire investigators and attorneys haggled over his acts.

“I would like to say I’m very sorry for the people I did hurt,” Jones said when asked if he wanted to address the court. “It won’t happen again. This is a wake-up call for me. I’m sorry for the lady I had hurt. I blame myself for the stupid stuff I done. I did hurt myself. I also hurt my family.”

Judge Williams rejected extraordinary sentencing, saying guidelines account for the more heinous aspects of serial arson.

“He obviously is suffering mentally and psychologically and needs a lot of work,” he said of Jones. “All indications are that he loves burning and he is a real danger to the public.”

The judge also ordered Jones not to set foot on Springhill Lake – now Empirian Village – property without permission from his probation officer.

“I don’t think it’s enough after all the lives he’s ruined,” said former Springhill Lake resident Dawn Dempsey, who testified for the prosecution. “He’s been in trouble before and he’s set fires before. He set fires at a time when he knew people would be sleeping.”
