City Council Legislative Priorities Include Funds for Fire Station

by Barbara Hopkins

On December 8 the Greenbelt City Council will hold a dinner with the city's delegation to the state legislature and county councilmember to present the city's legislative priorities for 2011. At its regular meeting on November 22 council struggled to agree on just what those priorities would be.

City staff recommends keeping the list short to better manage the initiatives selected and to focus attention on key issues. Staff will develop a booklet for each item giving details and appropriate background. Prior to the dinner a summary will be provided to the group for their review.

Priorities

Staff proposed four state priorities, including protection of municipal funding, revision of noise barrier policies along the Beltway (to mandate additional sound barriers based on an increase in decibel levels), use of the UM shuttle by municipal residents if the municipality contributes financially to the shuttle and certain environmental initiatives previously supported by council (creating a container deposit program, encouraging alternative fuel options at gas stations, discouraging use of plastic bags).

County priorities suggested by staff include protection of municipal funding sources, a new fire station and modification of pawn shop legislation (to prohibit pawn shops from selling gift cards or new, unopened merchandise). Council would also continue to support priorities of the Maryland Municipal League (restore Municipal Highway User Revenues and Police Aid, enable alternative revenue-raising means), the Prince George's County Municipal Association and the Metropolitan Washington Council of Governments (COG).

Opposition to the Intercounty Connector (ICC) was on last year's list, but deleted now since the ICC is already under construction.

Council Dissension

Councilmembers had no shortage of ideas for prioritizing the list of legislation to support but few recommendations on what to leave off when adding something new.

Councilmember Konrad Herling wanted to add that the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority (WMATA) should receive sufficient state funding.

Herling and Councilmember Leta Mach asked to keep municipal electrical aggregation on the list. Included last year, it had been removed from the current list.

Roberts advocated for continued opposition to the ICC, citing a need to get away from a highway mentality to thinking more about mass transit. He garnered support on this issue from two members of the audience, Doug Love and Joe Murray. Love said it should be included under environmental issues, as the ICC has become a barrier to the movements of wildlife. Murray said he has seen research showing an increase in certain diseases among people living near highways.

Mayor Judith Davis, who will present council's ideas at the dinner, agreed with COG and staff recommendations that a short list made a more effective presentation and focuses attention on issues of highest priority.

She asked what issues could be left off to accommodate new ideas. Councilmembers Rodney Roberts and Edward Putens objected to the idea of limiting the number of issues to be supported. Putens said the priority is what's best for the citizens of Greenbelt, not conforming to a certain number of issues.

Other Important Issues

Issues on page two listed as also important to Greenbelt are: opposition to extension of Kenilworth Avenue, support of the Metro Purple Line, a prohibition on transfers of gas station liquor licenses and giving municipalities authority to assess fines and remove illegal signs on state

Energy Experts Analyze 28 Pilot Homes in GHI

by Gretchen Overdurff, GHI General Manager

During November the 28 homes in the Greenbelt Homes, Inc. (GHI) energy upgrade pilot program were thoroughly evaluated to see how they've fared after about 70 years of use. There is no cost to GHI because the National Association of Home Builders Research Center conducted the energy assessment under a grant from the U.S. Department of Energy Building America program.

During the assessment the layout of windows, heaters and other appliances was noted. A video camera recorded condensation problems, and a thermal infrared camera found insulation gaps and air leaks. In blower door tests, a large fan at the exterior entrance lowered the pressure throughout the house to measure air leakage.

The 28 homeowners were given questionnaires about how they stay warm in winter, whether sealing windows with plastic, using draft blockers around doors or using plug-in heaters. "The way people live in the house can have a big effect on energy usage and comfort," said Joe Wiehagen, senior research engineer at the Research Center. "People who cook a lot or take long baths are more likely to have moisture concerns in homes with poor ventilation. People who are in the home all day will usually have more energy use. But we're really looking for obvious improvements, where benefits would accrue to all homeowners regardless of individual preferences."

David Morse, a member of the GHI Board of Directors, posted a video of his home's assessment on YouTube. He said, "This will give members a chance to see the Pilot Program in action. We need to do whatever we can to make the program more accessible and less mysterious."

For more information about the energy assessments or the energy upgrade pilot program, contact Eldon Ralph, assistant general manager at GHI, at eralph@greenbelthomes.net or 301-474-4161, ext. 128. American Education Week November 14 to 20, 2010

In a celebration of American education, these columns are telling the stories of selected teachers from the schools that serve the Greenbelt community.

This week readers will get a glimpse inside Turning Point Academy. It follows last week's feature on Eleanor Roosevelt High School teachers Jennifer Massagli and Danielle Sinclitico written by two 11th grade student reporters and prior profiles of teachers at Magnolia and Greenbelt Elementary Schools. In coming weeks we will focus on Springhill Lake Elementary and Greenbelt Middle Schools.

Energy and Passion Drive Turning Point Teacher

by Melanie Lynn Griffin

The last of the students have cleaned up their desks, hoisted backpacks and gotten safely onboard the yellow school bus. Kendall Wilson-Flippin leans back in her chair and breathes a deep sigh. After an hour-long morning commute, she's spent the last seven hours wrangling two classes of fifth graders. But she is still smiling and energetic. "Those are my kids - all 44 of them."

The classroom where Wilson-Flippin teaches language arts and social studies is housed in one of several modular buildings that Turning Point Academy on Good Luck Road has installed to accommodate a growing student population. The first charter school in Prince George's County, Turning Point has grown from 120 to 464 students since opening in 2006.

Kendall Wilson-Flippin never imagined herself here. She was thinking more along the lines of Broadway when she chose the Visual and Performing Arts program at Suitland High School and then graduated from Spelman College in Atlanta with a degree in theater and dance. "I never thought I would be a teacher," she says.

But when Teach for America came recruiting at Spelman, she "felt a calling" and signed up. She taught first grade for two years in Atlanta before moving home to Maryland to teach at a charter school in Anne Arundel County. Eight years after answering the call, she now feels

by Melanie Lynn Griffin

Lesli Jackson sits on a miniature chair amidst the cheerful clutter of her first-grade classroom. Buckets of crayons, pencils and scissors are lined up in the corner next to a large globe of the world and a birthday bulletin board features cutouts of green balloons, blue cakes and orange hats. Charts of numbers, letters, months and seasons cover the walls.

Jackson's face comes alive as she describes the newest addition to the décor. A board festooned with colorful personalized popcorn boxes helps keep track of each child's progress in "spelling important high frequency words that 'pop up' when you're reading," she says.

part in the monthly popcorn celebration. "I've seen a lot of improvement since last year. Most kids get to participate. And popcorn's really inexpensive," she laughs.

In only her second year of teaching, Jackson seems to have found her niche at Turning Point Academy. Principal Dr. Kenneth Jones says, "It's amazing what she can do with the youngsters. Some people just have that feel and she has it."

Following in the footsteps of her father, aunt and great grandmother, Lesli Jackson has always wanted to be a teacher. "I don't know if it's genetic but I can't imagine doing anything else," Jackson says. "I love my job, I

Letters to the Editor

Thankful to Be in Greenbelt

As the holidays approach and I stop to think about all there is to be thankful for, in addition to the continuing presence and support of loving family and friends, I count as one of my true blessings the fact that I am so fortunate to live in Greenbelt. Over the last two months I have enjoyed several Reel and Meal presentations at the New Deal Café, including "Green Towns U.S.A." which kicked off the Utopia Film Festival, and another on environmental art which included local artist Paul Downs as a speaker.

The weekend before Halloween I enjoyed sitting in Roosevelt Center with many neighbors carving pumpkins and listening to various musicians, including the wonderful Caleb Stine.

The following evening, my teenage son and I followed the trail of the enchanting Pumpkin Walk, stopping often to take pictures of the amazing jack-o-lanterns lining the path in the North Woods. (Thank you Alison and crew for keeping this 20-year tradition alive!)

The next day I enjoyed another autumn festival, with craftspersons, more wonderful musicians and an opportunity to make fall/winter fairie houses which we carried in a procession to the Three Sisters Garden by the Community Center, all sponsored by CHEARS and all part of putting the garden to bed for the winter.

That weekend, in particular, was full of so many simple pleasures (including perfect autumn weather), that I kept returning to it in my mind as things got rough at work in subsequent weeks. I just pictured all the wonderful activities I had been able to participate in, which resulted from the active leadership of so many different groups. It was a picture of bliss and it continues to restore my perspective in trying circumstances.

In November my family participated in another enjoyable Artful Afternoon where we played with words and images and, as always, were delighted to see the diversity of others' creative approaches. This was followed by the Alight Dance Theater's powerful and moving performance of "Speechless," which explored the struggles of parents with special needs children.

I am always inspired by how much civic pride, civic involvement, artistic opportunities and focus on individual and community well-being there is at the heart of Greenbelt and I definitely count Greenbelt in my list of blessings this Thanksgiving. Happy Thanksgiving to everyone.

Amter GCAN Talk On "The Polluters"

The next meeting of the Greenbelt Climate Action Network (GCAN) will be held on Wednesday, December 8 at 7 p.m. in Room 114 at the Greenbelt Community Center. The program will feature a talk by Steven Amter, the author of "The Polluters: The Making of Our Chemically Altered Environment."

Amter's new book, "Polluters" is a history of the chemical industry and the environment. Amter says today's environmental problems were understood far earlier than most people realize but that the industry used its economic and political power to block regulation. The Washington Post review says the book is "remarkably timely, extensively researched and accessible." Booklist calls it "an unlikely page-turner." His talk will draw historical parallels to present day issues including how the original fight over leaded gasoline was an early test (and loss) of the precautionary principle; the chemical industry's furious reaction to Rachel Carson's "Silent Spring;" how the early failures of regulatory agencies to control pollution led to the creation of the EPA; and how tactics still used today to fight environmental progress were pioneered in some of these early battles. Amter is a senior environmental scientist with Disposal Safety, Inc., a Washington, D.C., consulting firm that specializes in the history of pollution.

Also on the list: full funding of the educational program, Bridge to Excellence; exploring the possibility of funding the city rather than the county to run TheBus; increasing penalties for red light camera violations (assess points, loss of license); addressing inequities in tax assessments of apartments; funding for dredging Greenbelt Lake (estimated at $1 million); requiring an art component in new developments and funding for schools to clean snow from sidewalks.

In the end, Davis agreed to structure the presentation to skim over municipal funding, since the delegations already know it is of interest to the city, leaving the details to the accompanying written narrative. Funding for WMATA would be included in the transit service issue (increased funding, more weekend service, reprioritizing state funding toward mass transit instead of highways), which would be moved from page 2 to page 1.

Re-establishment of a county landlord-tenant commission would also be moved up in priority to page 1.

Synagogue Launches Music Showcase

Mishkan Torah Synagogue has begun a Young Performers Concert Series to showcase a number of its young adult members who have become serious musicians and are or hope to become professional musicians. The first concert will be on Saturday, December 11 at 7:30 p.m. with Ben Greenfield. Light refreshments will follow the concert.

Greenfield is the son of Mishkan Torah Cantor Phil Greenfield. His mother is a professional concert flutist and singer who performs under her maiden name of Carolyn Sonnen. Ben Greenfield graduated from Baldwin-Wallace College in Berea, Ohio, with a degree in musical performance where he took part in operatic productions and gave solo recitals. Afterward he has studied voice at the Peabody Institute of Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. He performed the role of Tamino in a fully-staged production of "The Magic Flute" by the Opera Company of Southern Maryland before sold-out audiences. He has also followed his father's career lead by being a cantor during High Holy Day Services in a synagogue in Ohio where he has been a part-time cantor for the last six years.

The theme behind the selection of music for this concert will be "Music with a Jewish Connection." In classical and popular music, there are many famous or familiar works that have some sort of Jewish connection – they are adapted from Jewish liturgy or the lyrics have a Jewish theme though the music is not normally recognized as being Judaic. The composer may have been Jewish or the subject about Jews or Judaism, something about which not many people are aware.

There will be at least three formal concerts this year that are fundraisers for Mishkan Torah. There is a fee.

For more information call 301-474-4223, visit www.mishkantorahsynagogue.org/ypcs or see the ad on page 2.

Mildred Muhammad to Speak at Library

Greenbelt's newly reopened branch library will host a "Meet the Author" program on Tuesday, December 7 at 7 p.m. Mildred Muhammad will discuss her book "Scared Silent."

The former wife of convicted "D.C. Sniper" John Muhammad, she tells about the domestic violence she suffered and the tragic events that occurred after their divorce. These events led up to the October 2002 sniper killings in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area.

Having kidnapped their three children and living with them on the run for 18 months, John Muhammad asked for permanent custody of them and threatened to kill her. Mildred had to live under cover for eight months in a women's shelter.

In "Scared Silent," Mildred tells of these events to show how domestic violence hurts entire families, including children. She hopes what she reveals will give new insight into this national social ill.

2010 Gobble Wobble

On Thanksgiving Morning, the Greenbelt Recreation Department hosted the fifth annual Gobble Wobble. The morning was cold and wet, but that did not deter a record number of runners and walkers from participating in the event. The 2010 Gobble Wobble had 180 registrants, doubling the total from just two years ago. With spectators and the small children accompanying the many families participating, there were over 200 individuals at this year's Gobble Wobble.

In what has quickly become a tradition, Sergeant Chuck Dyson from the Sergeant's Program led a warm-up activity in the Youth Center parking lot prior to the start of the race/walk. With the firing of a starting pistol and the official Gobble Wobble turkey mascot leading the way, runners followed a 3 mile course down the path beside the Braden Field tennis courts and twice around the Buddy Attick Park lake path before crossing the finish line. Walkers were treated to a scenic 1.5 mile lap around the lake path.

All youth participants received a medal upon completion of the race/walk. Medals were awarded to the top 3 male and female finishers. The top finishers and their unofficial finishing times are listed below.

1st Place Male: Brian Faherty (16:38) 1st Place Female: Megan Reberg (25:20)
2nd Place Male: Lloyd Rawley (20:12) 2nd Place Female: Derin Kay (25:24)
3rd Place Male: Elliott Hamilton (21:04) 3rd Place Female: Elaine Bond (25:55)

Thanks and congratulations to all that participated and completed the Gobble Wobble. The Greenbelt Recreation Department would also like to thank the sponsors of this year's Gobble Wobble: Greenbelt CO-OP and Sergeant Chuck Dyson with the Sergeant's Program.

After graduating from Elizabeth Seton High School in Bladensburg, she attended Bennett College in Greensboro, N.C., where she received a degree in elementary education in May 2009. When she landed her job at Turning Point, she reached out to her beloved first grade teacher, Mr. Lynch of John Carroll Elementary School in Landover. "He was the best teacher I've ever had," she says. "He inspired me to want to teach first grade."

Much to her surprise and delight, Mr. Lynch remembered her. "I couldn't believe it. I saved his email," she says. She's always loved school and can't seem to get enough of it. In addition to teaching 24 first graders every day, she's currently in graduate school at Bowie State working toward certification as a reading specialist.

Care First

Jackson's philosophy of education is simple. "Care for them first; teach them second. I treat them as if they were mine," she says. "I think they can tell that I genuinely care."

The philosophy appears to bear fruit. "I can put any type of student in her class and they will succeed," reports Principal Jones. He says she modifies her instruction for each student and "goes beyond the call of duty. All children can learn with her."

Jackson says her classroom of 14 boys and 10 girls is "a real bundle of personalities." Some are quiet, some love attention, some are withdrawn. "And I have a lot of active, rambunctious children. Anything can happen in a day."

Jackson learned last year that it's important to set expectations early in the school year. Some teachers advised her not to even crack a smile until December. "I love to smile and laugh but when it comes time to do what I asked you to, that's exactly what I expect."

And if they don't comply? "Knowing that the consequences come immediately." She snaps her fingers.

Too young to have a string of success stories behind her, Jackson clearly has a future full of them. She talks about one boy who "really gave me a run for my money." He caused a lot of trouble in her class last year but he was "smart, very smart" and she could reason with him. She told him that she could give him good attention or bad attention; it was his choice. "It's easy just to yell or take away recess or write a student off as a behavior problem. But it takes work to really get to know them and understand what makes them tick and find a way to navigate through that."

By the end of the year, the boy had completely turned around. This year, he comes back to her first grade class and helps the younger children with their subtraction.

Jackson doesn't think people realize how hard it is to be a teacher. Just staying on top of things is a huge challenge – managing students, coping with paperwork, reaching out to parents, the lack of resources.

But in the end she says, "This is not a job you do for yourself. You do it for the kids and it has to be excellent because they deserve that." Mr. Lynch must be proud.

Video Game Music Concert at UM

The University of Maryland's Gamer Symphony Orchestra (GSO), the country's premiere collegiate ensemble dedicated to playing video game music, will present a concert on Saturday, December 11 at 2 p.m. in the DeKelbourn Concert Hall at the Clarice Smith Performing Arts Center. The group's fifth annual fall concert features selections from such video games as Final Fantasy X, Mega Man, Donkey Kong Country and others.

The student-run GSO works to establish video game music as a serious art form and to use that music as a way to bring new and younger audiences to orchestral performances.

The performance is free, family-friendly and open to the public. It will last about 90 minutes.

she was "meant to be a teacher."

It hasn't always been easy. "My first year of teaching I think I went home and cried just about every night," she remembers. She had to learn that a teacher's role is "to influence and to serve as a model, not to save every child." Her advice to new teachers is "to take care of yourself or you're no good to the students . . . You have to understand what you can control and what you can't control."

Responsibility, Fun

Wilson-Flippin appears to have things well under control in her fourth year at Turning Point. She provides her students with "a very structured routine" and supposes they think she's a strict disciplinarian. "I am very, very adamant about them understanding responsibility. It makes all the difference."

She encourages parents to instill responsibility in their children, too. "Sometimes we think supporting our child is making allowances or excuses for them because we just don't want to see them fail," she says, but the truth is that only hurts when they get out into the real world. She calls parents her "partners in education" and values their involvement. "It keeps me on my toes," she says "and holds me accountable. When we each do our part, we can see the results at the end."

Wilson-Flippin also leaves room in her classes for fun and games. "We have lots of singing and chanting and rapping and beating on desks and dancing and acting. Because my background is in the performing arts, I really bring that into the classroom. I love it."

Her students have just finished a reading series on nature's fury and natural disasters, which tied in well with current events and social studies. Along one wall are sheets of bright yellow paper bearing vocabulary words like earthquake, devastation, upheaval and undulating.

Another wall is covered with photographs of the students' families, part of a lesson on family trees. Lining the front wall are pictures of historic figures like Rosa Parks, Jesse Jackson and Langston Hughes. "I'm taking a class on multicultural education so I'm more aware than ever of the importance of children being able to see where they fit in."

She's not just taking a class. Turning Point Principal Dr. Kenneth Jones describes her as "a lifelong learner." In May she will receive her masters in administration from Trinity College. "I want to model for the kids that you never get too old to learn," she says.

In her spare time, Wilson-Flippin holds two part-time tutoring jobs, teaches dance, volunteers with the alumni group of her sorority (she's currently choreographing a debutante ball) and oh, yeah – she's also married to a Baptist pastor so she has a few weekend responsibilities. "I'm really dedicated to serving people," she says.

Someday maybe she'll go to law school. She applied years ago and then chose Teach for America instead. But now the legal field has more meaning for her. "I can use the background and experience that I have and go into educational law or policy and try to make a difference on a bigger scale . . . I guess you could say I'm passionate."

1 in 3 Voters Respond To City's Questionnaire

Assistant Greenbelt City Manager David Moran submitted a report on October 8 to the Greenbelt City Council summarizing responses made to an election questionnaire for voters and others to complete at the November 2009 city election. Below is a condensation of that report. The complete report is at the city offices. A total of 32% of the people who voted completed 770 questionnaires, representing a response rate drop of 7%.

City Services

A key purpose of the questionnaire is for respondents to rate city services. The survey used a numerical scale for this purpose. All city services scored well, with many very highly rated.

In order to achieve a score of 4.00, three-fourths of respondents would have had to rate a service "good" or "excellent." In order of scoring, the top six rated services were Pre-School Classes (4.62), Horticulture/Planting (4.49), Senior Programs (4.45), Fireworks Display (4.45), Camp Programs (4.44) and Aquatics Programs (4.44).

The six lowest rated services were Springhill Lake Recreation Center (3.39), Dog Park (3.64), Parking Enforcement (3.67), Street Lighting (3.74), Traffic Control (3.88) and Animal Control (3.88).

Eighty-three (83%) percent of those who had contact with the Police Department since 2007 indicated that the police employee was polite and courteous.

The score for dispatcher responsiveness increased by 5% to 4.00 over the previous survey. Ninety-four percent of respondents who had contact with Community Development departmental employees noted the employee was polite and courteous; 84% said they were assisted satisfactorily.

Taxes

Under City Services and Taxes, residents were asked to rate the value of city services and programs for their tax dollars. The overall average score was 4.06 out of 5.00, similar to the 4.04 score in 2007. A majority of respondents said they would support a tax increase to maintain current services and programs (421 or 55%) and/or to provide fair compensation to employees (413, or 54%). Only 29% (224), however, said they would support a tax hike to increase city services and programs.

Schools

The election survey asked a number of education-related questions, with 214 residents reporting they had school-age children. Once these respondents were broken down by school, the number of responses for each school listed ranged from a high of 67 for Eleanor Roosevelt High School to a low of four for Turning Point Academy. St. Hugh's School was highest rated at 4.29, while Greenbelt Middle School received 1.92. The Prince George's School system overall received a 2.53.

Other Survey Questions

Seven hundred, or 91%, of respondents said they routinely recycle. When asked why they don't recycle, a number of respondents said they lived in apartments and recycling was unavailable or inconvenient.

Only 25% of those responding said they had watched programming on Greenbelt Municipal Access channels. It should be noted that 39% of survey respondents said they are not able to access these channels.

In response to a question about how residents prefer to receive information about city programs and services, the top preference was the News Review, followed by the city newsletter and the city website.

In response to questions about which methods provided useful information about City Elections, the top three answers were News Review ads (56%), the city newsletter (55%) and sample ballots (31%).

When asked if they had visited www.greenbeltmd.gov, 447 (58%) of those responding marked yes.

Commuting Patterns

Of survey respondents self-identified as currently working, 23% (123) work in Greenbelt, 28% (148) work in Prince George's County and 25% (132) work in Washington, D.C. Of those who responded to the commuting patterns question, 76% (388) drive, 13% (64) use Metrorail and 5% (27) cycle or walk to work.

Analysis

How Reliable Is the City's Questionnaire?

by James Giese

Back in the 60s, early in my career as Greenbelt City Manager, I initiated the election questionnaire, offering voters the opportunity to rate the various city services and provide complaints or other comments. While some city staff members may have had some concerns about receiving a bad report card, the results were generally positive and supportive of city services.

It also became clear that many residents liked the idea of this semi-annual evaluation opportunity. The city council also took interest in the program and began to propose new questions, some having policy implications, a subject area staff had originally avoided.

A few residents, however, criticized the survey, primarily for not being a statistically valid random sample of the city's population. They were, of course, correct. The survey may not reflect the views of the vast majority of residents who, for whatever reason, do not vote in city elections. Nor may it reflect accurately the views of all those who voted, because most do not take the time or trouble to complete it. (This year only one out of three voters did so.)

Another Survey?

The questionnaire reflects only the views of Greenbelt residents who took the time and made the effort to vote and then took the extra time and made the effort to complete the questionnaire. It would be interesting to do another questionnaire of a statistically valid random sample of the city's population to determine what differences in opinion there may be.

I believe, however (though not validated), that the survey reflects the views of those who have the greatest interest in Greenbelt's city government, who most actively participate in city affairs, who are most apt to influence city policy and who, in normal circumstances, decide who shall govern the city.

However, this statement is true only as of the date of the election. As the 2008 and 2010 national elections have demonstrated, voter opinion can change significantly in a relatively short period of time.

Glaring Example

One statistic, that of residency, sticks out glaringly to demonstrate how different are the questionnaire respondents from Greenbelt's population as a whole. Only seven percent of questionnaire respondents live in apartments, unlike the approximately 54 percent of Greenbelt residents who do so.

Historically, apartment residents take little interest in local government and tend not to vote in local elections. Those voting at Springhill Lake Elementary School came from rental apartments (Empirian Village, now Franklin Park). Those apartments constitute about 30 percent of the city's housing units, 18 percent of the city's registered voters, 10 percent of those who voted in the 2009 city election and only three percent of those completing questionnaires.

In 1969 normal voting patterns changed in the city and Springhill Lake residents turned out en masse to vote. They were angry that the main access road (now Cherrywood Lane) was poorly paved and filled with potholes. They blamed the city. Even though the road was privately owned, results of that election sent a Springhill Lake resident (Joel Katz) to city council, defeated two incumbents and elevated Francis White from last place, in 1967, to first place and the office of mayor.

Age Variance

Another example of how questionnaire respondents differ from the city's population is the issue of age. Of the respondents, 39 percent were between the ages of 45 and 60 and 37 percent were over 60. In 2000, census data shows that 17 percent of Greenbelt's population were between ages 45 to 60 and only 9.5 percent were 60 and older.

The significant difference between the demographics of questionnaire respondents and the census data raises considerable doubt as to the usefulness of information concerning work locations, methods of commute, percent recycling and sources of information.

Nor can we be assured that all Greenbelt residents are as happy with city services as are questionnaire respondents. However, because other indicators of how residents might regard city services are also generally positive, respondents may be representative of the community on these matters as well.

Raise Taxes?

Responses on raising taxes should be of particular interest to city councilmembers. The majority of the respondents would support a tax increase to sustain existing city services or to provide "fair compensation" (undefined) to city employees. With local governments experiencing continuing loss of normal revenues in this current recession, tax increases may be important in balancing the budget.

Council and staff need to be wary, however. Apartment residents or another currently non-vocal group could turn out once more en masse to change election results. A charismatic and vocal citizen could initiate a new movement to change the course of city government as I have seen happen elsewhere.

While raising taxes has never been much of an issue in city elections, Greenbelt voters joined with other county voters to impose tax limits on the county government and, later, to oppose removing those limitations.

When it comes to the will of the electorate, nothing should be taken for granted.

Celebrate the Holidays With a Dazzling Smile

There has never been a better time to improve your smile! Adults are having their teeth straightened and brightened in unprecedented numbers. Our dental patients are thrilled with the beautiful straight smile Invisalign gives them with nearly invisible, clear removable trays. Invisalign can correct a wide variety of dental and orthodontic concerns and is more convenient, more comfortable and less expensive than metal braces. Invisalign is usually faster than traditional metal braces – some cases take only five months to correct fully. For most adults, Invisalign treatment is finished in less than a year. Invisalign is a great way to transform your smile without interfering with your day-to-day life.

If you are self-conscious about your smile or concerned about your dental and overall health because of crowded or crooked teeth, Invisalign orthodontics is a great solution. The clear, comfortable aligner trays straighten teeth and correct your bite just like metal braces – only almost no one else can tell you are wearing them. Dental hygienists endorse Invisalign because their dental patients take the clear trays out when they eat then brush and floss before replacing them. This keeps the gums healthy during treatment and helps prevent decay and tooth discoloration - potential problems with traditional braces. Invisalign is a great way to straighten teeth while maintaining excellent oral hygiene habits.

Many adults notice that their teeth shift with time, crowding and getting crooked – especially the lower front teeth. Even people who had braces as teenagers often experience relapse causing crooked or crowded teeth. Overall gum and bone health are improved when teeth fit together with an ideal bite. When teeth are properly aligned, the gums fit tighter around the teeth, enhancing periodontal health. Crowded and crooked teeth are harder to brush and floss causing plaque buildup, tooth decay and periodontal disease. When left untreated, missing or widely spaced teeth can prevent normal chewing and increase the likelihood of periodontal disease and bone loss. Misaligned teeth and jaws can cause abnormal wear on teeth and painful jaw joint problems including TMJ syndrome.

Benefits Of Straight Teeth Include:

- Improved bite, chewing and wear patterns of the teeth
- Increased ability to clean the teeth
- Improved long-term health of gums and teeth
- A more attractive smile

There are advantages to selecting an Invisalign Preferred Provider who is also experienced in other forms of cosmetic dentistry. Dentists who have comprehensive dental training can address multiple dental concerns with a wide range of dental solutions that are specific to each dental patient's unique needs and objectives. Invisalign Orthodontics is often combined with other dental treatments including whitening, dental implants, porcelain veneers and crowns. Because misaligned bites and crooked teeth can contribute to other health problems, Invisalign orthodontics may be covered by your dental insurance.
