Area Residents Are Participants In M-NCPPC Planning Events

by Thomas X. White

On Wednesday, March 2 the planning staff of the Maryland-National Capital Park & Planning Commission (M-NCPPC) held the first community meeting at the Greenbelt Community Center for a nearly two-year-long planning update of the 2001 Approved Sector plan and Sectional Map Amendment for the Greenbelt Metro Area. This meeting followed an initial meeting with the Greenbelt City Council on December 22, 2010, and a February 2 meeting with the Greenbelt Advisory Planning Board (See GNR February 10, 2011).

Since these earlier meetings, boundaries of the proposed planning area have expanded. They now include the original Sector Plan areas of Greenbelt West; an extension eastward to include the Golden Triangle commercial office park area, the Belle Point office and townhome neighborhood, the Charlestowne townhomes and highrise apartments and University Square apartments. Further eastward the boundaries also include commercial and office development south of Greenbelt Road and on both sides of Hanover Parkway in Greenbelt East and the commercial and office development south of Greenbelt Road in Berwyn Heights.

Map Amendment

Reflecting this expanded planning area, the planning project is retitled "Greenbelt Metro Area and MD 193 Corridor Sector Plan and Sectional Map Amendment." In a brief summary document distributed to attendees at the community meeting, it was noted also that the recommended sector plan boundaries will ultimately be considered by the Prince George's County Planning Board and will require approval by the District Council (Prince George's County Council when acting on planning and zoning).

These actions are expected to take place before formal initiation of the planning process in May.

The project summary document noted as well that the 2001 Approved Sector Plan and Sectional Map Amendment for the Greenbelt Metro Area had been approved prior to the County's 2002 General Plan and other key functional master plans, such as the 2005 Green Infrastructure Plan, the 2008 Public Safety Facilities Plan, the 2009 Master Plan of Transportation, the 2010 Historic Sites and Districts Plan and the 2010 Water Resources Plan.

According to the summary document, "This planning effort is timely due to an increased emphasis in the county on transit-oriented and supportive development, safe and complete streets

Teens Ready to Open Curtains On New Chris Cherry Musical

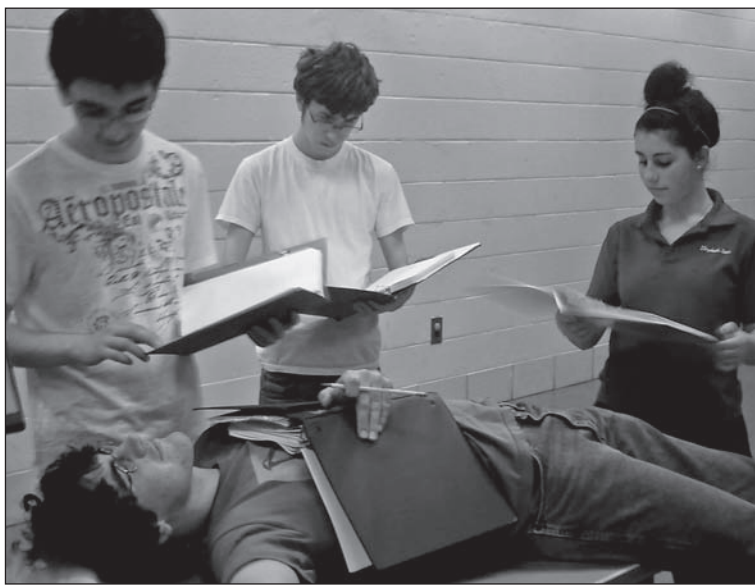

by Cindy Henneberger

Twenty-six area teens from 10 area schools have been practicing since January to put on the world premiere of The School for Super-Heroes Presents Orlando Furioso, The Musical, a new play by Greenbelter Chris Cherry.

The lights will go up at the Greenbelt Arts Center (GAC) during the last two weekends of March for the eleventh annual Greenbelt Youth Musical. Viewers will catch a glimpse of this swashbuckling fantasy epic featuring knights, wizards, warrior damsels – and a twist.

It's a musical about a musical. In the first musical, teenagers in a high school for super heroes feel left out by their offbeat powers that are not-so-super. But they team up to put on an ambitious reaching high school performance. Thus the second musical, Orlando Furioso, straight from 16th century classic literature – which is where the knights and castles come in, along with a major Christian-Muslim world conflict and star-crossed lovers who get caught in the fray. The outcasts soon find the results of their production prove more powerful than they ever expected.

This year's performers hail from a cornucopia of schools including Greenbelt's own Eleanor Roosevelt High School and Greenbelt Middle School. Other area schools represented are Kenmoor School, Newport Mill School and Robert Goddard

Middle School, Friends Community School; and Central, Laurel, Albert Einstein and Elizabeth Seton High Schools.

Most of the cast also participated in Camp Encore, the Greenbelt Recreation Department's four-week summer day camp for exploring theater arts. The event is jointly presented by the Recreation Department and GAC.

Featured vocal soloists include Ben Shaw, Flavia Perrotta, Aaron Solomon, Jill Schneider, Candace Jones, Jonas Ventimiglia, Alma Knutson, Abram Shaw, Olivia

Guerrieri, Aaron Goldstein, Carlos Castillo, Isaac Solomon and Jan Knutson.

Performances are scheduled for Saturday, March 19 at 7 p.m.; Sunday, March 20 at 2 p.m.; Friday, March 25 at 7 p.m. and Saturday, March 26 at both 2 p.m. and 7 p.m.

Advance purchases may be made at the Greenbelt Community Center business office, 15 Crescent Road, between 9 a.m. and 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. The phone number for ordering tickets and information is 301-397-2208.

Angella Foster – Telling Stories through Dance

by Karen Yoho

When your life takes you from Kentucky to Michigan to North Carolina, from New York City to Houston and then to Greenbelt, you know you have a story to tell. For Angella Foster, who tells her story through dance, we are fortunate her journey brought her at last to Greenbelt.

Born and raised in western Kentucky, Foster was a gifted student and talented dancer, choreographing since the age of 14. She describes her work and her interests as eclectic. "My mother always said I had too many interests for my own good," says Foster.

She was most drawn to performance art, she said, but she has also studied costume design, music, architecture and design and writing. Without a college or university dance program in Kentucky, Foster said she headed to Hope College in Michigan, where she found a vibrant program. She took a life lesson there from a fiction writing class – to write what you know about.

With stops along the way to pursue performance and post-graduate studies in New York City, including the Merce Cunningham Dance Studio, Foster traveled to Houston to work with the Ad Deum Dance Company. Next she married Ben Foster, an intelligence analyst with the U.S. government, which brought them to the D.C. area. They lived in Hyattsville while Foster pursued her MFA in Dance

Radical Readers Campaign Launches Here at Library

by Danielle Celdran

The Prince George's County Memorial Library System and the Maryland State Education Association (MSEA) launched a statewide Radical Readers program at the Greenbelt Branch Library on February 24. Radical Readers had been created about four years ago by MSEA "to encourage middle school students to become extreme about the joy of reading."

The event was open to the public. About 28 Greenbelt Middle School students and their teachers attended as well as officials from Prince George's library headquarters, MSEA, Friends of the Greenbelt Library, Greenbelt Mayor Judith Davis and library patrons and members of the public.

Co-sponsors of the program include MSEA, Governor Martin O'Malley, the Maryland Association of Librarians and the Maryland Library Association.

This year Greenbelt Middle School has been chosen as a pilot location, encouraging all students to participate in a school-wide reading competition. Students will be provided with a "reading buddy," a library volunteer, who can help select books and read

Hateful Words

While reading the News Review this week I did not enjoy encountering [the "N" word]. Unfortunately, readers of the front page profile on resident Walter Moody encountered that powerfully noxious word without any warning. Were they cringing like me, wondering if it was really necessary?

Everyone I know finds the word to be vile and anachronistic – and certainly inappropriate in a community newspaper.

No matter the author, I hope such hateful words will forever after be banished from your pages. Won't you please spare young readers or denizens of color the shock of seeing such venomous language in print, no matter the context?

Andy Carruthers

Clarification

In last week's front page article on the Greenbelt Homes, Inc. board of directors meeting, paragraph two should have read:

"Five motions recommended by the Finance Committee were reviewed regarding financial aspects of the upgrade and pilot project. Only one motion will be reviewed again at the March 10 board meeting. No comment period will occur."

Three Artists Exhibit Works At New Deal March-April

Three new artists' exhibits went on display at the New Deal Café on March 1. Ceramic pieces by Gina Mai Denn, paintings by Marian Williams and photography by Gary Jimerfield will be displayed throughout the Café until May 2. There will be a free artists' reception on Sunday, March 13 from 7 to 9 p.m. to which all are invited.

Mai Denn

Gina Mai Denn, an artist-in-residence at the Community Center, will display "A Small Case of the Blues (and Greens and other colors too)" of her favorite ceramic pieces. Showing a variety of styles and techniques she has worked in, there are both decorative works and functional items. Fancy vases, jars, bowls and whimsical vessels will fill the small display case in the front room of the Café – a turquoise blue glaze on many of the pieces is a favorite of hers. She shares studio space with three other ceramic artists, collectively called Studio 302, where she works mainly on the potters wheel making functional pieces but she also does some hand built pieces and small sculptures.

Mai Denn has been teaching the potters wheel and other ceramic arts since 1996 at the Community Center, the University of Maryland Art and Learning Center and elsewhere. She graduated cum laud in 1991 from Alfred University with a BA in fine arts and ceramic art as her major.

Williams

Marian Williams is a children's book author and illustrator. Her exhibit of watercolors and acrylics is entitled Hometown Memories. "Bigdaddy: A Granddaughter's Love Story" was her first work. Her art and writing has been featured in Today's Minister's Wife Magazine. She was among artists in the 2010 "All Hung" exhibit at the Montpelier Arts Center. She categorizes her art as in the naïve style or animated realism and enjoys rural life subjects. Another medium that intrigues her is found object collage.

Williams' vocation is in special education and social work. She is a lifelong Prince Georgian and lives in Upper Marlboro with her husband and daughter, where she continues to hone her craft.

Jimerfield

Gary Jimerfield will exhibit some of his most recent creations in "Examples: Selections from the Vault." He works in still photography, video and computer art.

He was educated at Georgetown College, Towson State University and the Corcoran School of Art and Design and has done independent study at the Library of Congress. He began photography in the early 70s and has been working in video since the 80s. His specialties include nature and southwestern landscapes and he has branched out into studio work with miniatures and abstracts. Jimerfield is a member of Bright Side Pictures, a trio of artists working in digital video, photography, miniature set design, painting and computer abstracts.

Program schedules will be available at the door. Attend the planetarium program "Mad 4 the Ms... Mercury and the Moon!" where attendees will learn about the MESSENGER mission to Mercury, look for Mercury in the sky and examine moon phases. This year marks the 25th anniversary of the Challenger Space Shuttle accident. Visitors may take a voyage to Mars in the Challenger Learning Center (space is limited; free tickets required) and sign the guest book.

Enjoy "Finding Fossils." Touch some live reptiles and meet a "living fossil" in the animal room. Dig for fossils and make a model fossil during scheduled times (tickets will be available at the door). At "Windmill Madness" see what else there is besides kites that rely on the March winds. Participate in demonstrations and interactive experiences generating electricity using wind. This evening also offers an opportunity for photographers and video crews to record science in action.

and revitalization of office and nonresidential development to enhance the county and city tax bases. There is also an opportunity to take advantage of the strategic location and historical importance of the Greenbelt and Berwyn Heights communities.”

The latter point was highlighted in the Timing section of the summary document, indicating the plan's expected approval in 2012, which is the 75th anniversary of historic Greenbelt, one of the best American examples of planned growth and community building of the 20th century.

Large Turnout

Turnout for the community meeting filled the Multipurpose Room with about a dozen or more M-NCPPC staff; members of Greenbelt, Berwyn Heights and College Park city councils; Greenbelt staff and area residents. The room had been set up with four 10-person break-out tables, primarily for residents, with M-NCPPC and city staffs circulating around the room.

Robert Duffey, planning supervisor for M-NCPPC, opened the meeting by introducing Ingrid Turner, chairperson of the Prince George's County Council; Mayor Judith Davis of Greenbelt and Chad Williams, planning coordinator for the Community Planning North Division of the M-NCPPC, who was described as project manager for the planning effort and moderator for the community meeting.

Williams provided a brief overview of the evening's agenda, inviting citizen participation and involvement in the process. He then set the basic ground rules for conduct of the four breakout sessions.

Breakout Session

At each of the four tables, one person was assigned to record the group's discussion and another volunteer assigned the role of reporting back the main points discussed at their table at the end of the breakout period. In general, the breakout groups were asked to identify those things they liked about the (planning) area; major challenges for rational planning they perceived the area poses; and what they would like to see happen because of the planning effort.

At each table at least two M-NCPPC planning staff acted as resources and to move discussion along so the three questions were given adequate consideration. Participants realized it is not always easy to keep discussion on track and on time but, for the most part, the process worked.

Most participants came from central Greenbelt but one table, made up of North College Park representatives, reflected their neighborhood's concerns: extending the planning boundaries to Route 1, taking steps to protect Narragansett Run from the impact of Metro development and dealings with local flooding in the area.

However, the group at that table, as well as those at the other three, discussed more general issues affecting the entire planning area, such as preservation of green space and making sure future development includes park and recreation facilities. All also stressed the need to retain and build upon the sense of community the area is known for. They also looked for coordinated and effective transit options for the area, especially for the Route 193 corridor, as well as a greater focus on bicycle and pedestrian-friendly shopping areas, with less reliance on automobiles and smaller expanses of parking lots.

Breakout Summaries

Doug Love of Greenbelt, the reporter for Table 1, noted consensus on liking the way the cities are organized, the existing green spaces and the relatively good features of walkability, accessibility and connectivity. Concerns and challenges they identified were the growing traffic on Route 193 and how it is managed; the need for an overall redevelopment of Beltway Plaza; a more cohesive transportation service for the area and improved connectivity between the various communities within the planning boundaries. For the future this group envisions a light rail type of system for Route 193.

Love made a personal pitch for better attention to public street lighting reflecting downward so as not to affect adversely the enjoyment of the night sky.

Laura Connelly of the Prince George's County Parks & Recreation Department served as reporter for Table 2. She listed several areas where the planning project should focus: strengthen connections to the Metro Station and between the various communities; bring more upscale retail to serve the area and improved bicycle and pedestrian accessibility; a safer Route 193 with better pedestrian and bicycle access; improved lighting for pedestrian safety; add to the green space; noise abatement for those residential communities adjacent to major highways; and concern about the intensity of development at the Metro Station.

The reporter for Table 3, Dave Hathcock of Berwyn Heights, reflected the North College Park community concerns, including extending the planning area's boundary to incorporate the communities across the rail tracks. Their report also included the issues with drainage, hydrology and flooding potential if development planned for the Metro site is not controlled adequately. They also were concerned with safe pedestrian connections over the railroad tracks and attention to the North College Park communities "view shed," referring to their view as being overwhelmed by planned high-rise office development at the Metro site, and the need for traffic reduction, noise abatement and light pollution control.

With a view to the future, the group felt that, because of the location and surrounding communities, the vision for the development and redevelopment of Greenbelt West should make it the "best in Prince George's County."

Table 4 Group

Keith Chernikoff, a member of the Greenbelt Advisory Planning Board, reporting for Table 4 noted they agreed with the M-NCPPC project summary document that the valuable features of original Greenbelt and its cohesive character should be expanded throughout the planning area. They also called for better connectivity for pedestrians, bicycles and buses.

They stressed the need for a unifying character to the planning area in development styles and set-backs. For areas slated for development and redevelopment, they emphasized attention to access, better retail, less density and the recovery of green space. They also hoped for an improved streetscape for Route 193 and were concerned about the threat of overwhelming traffic from north of the city.

At the close of the breakout table reports, one participant requested consideration of a charrette process for future workshops on the plan update. M-NCPPC staff members agreed to consider that possibility. The M-NCPPC will make another report at the March 14 meeting of the Greenbelt City Council and a newsletter/bulletin for community outreach will also be prepared. The timeline for the overall planning project is about 18 months.

Sometime in mid- to late-2012 a public hearing will be held on the proposed new plan. Williams noted that residents could get up-to-date information on the project website at www.pgplanning.org/greenbelt.htm.

Students' reading will then be logged and recorded by library staff. Two Barnes & Noble Nooks (in which books and magazines, as well as library books, can be downloaded) will be given away as prizes to the most consistent readers.

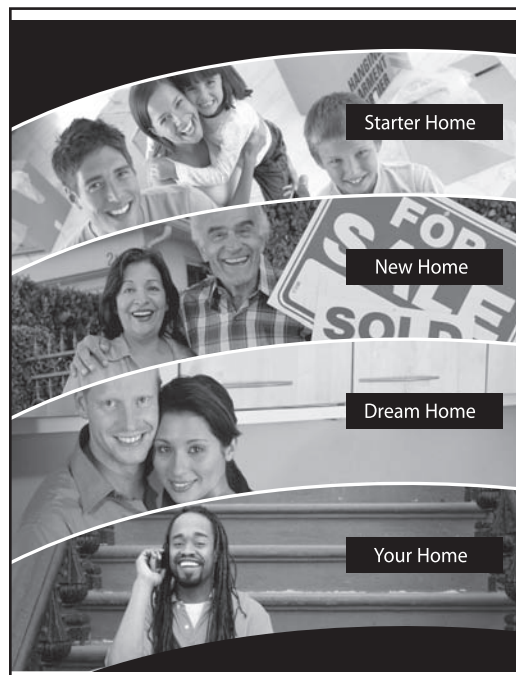

Donald Briscoe, president of the Prince George's County Educators Association, was motivating and enthusiastic as he exclaimed, "Reading is an exciting journey – that's what reading's all about!" MSEA Public Relations Organizational Specialist Debra Garner said, "Reading is truly the gateway to a successful future."

Four reviews of interesting books were given by library staff members. Students were then given a tour of the Greenbelt Library. Afterward the middle schoolers enjoyed a pizza lunch provided by the Friends of the Greenbelt Library before their return to school.

The students this reporter spoke with said they are excited to compete and to have a chance to win "cool" prizes. They said they had enjoyed their pizza lunch. Their favorite genres, they said, include mystery, romance, cookbooks and comics. Some said they will register for a library card.

Jacqueline Miller Byrd, a literary arts advocate who attended the program said, "If we can encourage any student to develop a love of reading, then they can apply this skill to any discipline (sports, politics, broadcast journalism)."

As Greenbelt Middle School students are challenged to become readers, other middle school students may also participate in Read Across Maryland, entering to win prizes. They can register at www.readacrossmaryland.org. Perhaps said best by Greenbelt Library Branch Manager Ellen Utley, "Catch the Spirit: Be Radical Readers!"

Choreography at the University of Maryland, dancing with local troupes.

Her job at the Clarice Smith Performing Arts Center's Community Engagement Office introduced her to Greenbelt, where she helped in planning an event celebrating Greenbelt's 70th anniversary, including live orchestral accompaniment to The City, a classic American documentary film created for the 1939 World's Fair.

Enamored with the New Deal town, she found Greenbelt irresistible. "I love the story of the place and I love the story at the heart of it," said Foster. "People value not only the place but the story itself. It has a handcrafted feel to it that spoke to me." Within a few weeks Foster and her husband visited the house that would become their home on Plateau Place.

Greenbelt Activities

Her life in Greenbelt includes directing the children's dance program for the Greenbelt Recreation Department. In addition to teaching classes to more than 100 Greenbelt youth, Foster designs the curriculum and handles administrative matters for the classes that range from creative movement and pre-ballet for the youngest to ballet, jazz, and modern dance for older children and teens.

Foster took on yet another role in 2010 as Founding Artistic Director for the performance group Alight Dance Theatre. The company, a nonprofit, rehearses regularly at the Community Center. Alight's mission is to create performance events using the power of story to inspire people to be compassionate viewer-participants in their communities.

One of Foster's proudest achievements was the staging of Speechless, which weaves together dance, gesture, text, video and live music to explore the struggles faced by parents of special needs children with communication issues.

Speechless was supported in part by funding from the Prince George's Art Council and a grant from the Kennedy Center Millennium Stage Local Dance Commissioning Project. It premiered on the Kennedy Center Millennium Stage with subsequent performances at the Greenbelt Community Center and at Dance Place in Washington, D.C.

Both Foster and her husband have strong roots in Kentucky but "performing in Greenbelt felt like performing for family," she says. The connection to family was at the heart of this original work, which was inspired by the experiences of her cousin who relies primarily on nonverbal communication tools to "speak" with her family. "My family was there at the Kennedy Center performance," she says. "It was interesting to see how we made something that was so personal connect to so many people."

Alight's next work, Truth be Told, will examine society's preoccupation with confession. "Why does a person's most private information fascinate us so? And what do our neighbors have to confess? The work is developing and evolving, so I am not sure where it will lead us," explains Foster.

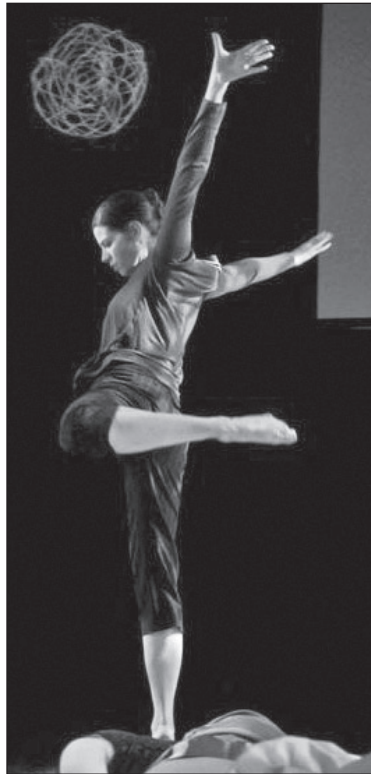

Other Projects

Foster continues to dance with Deborah Riley Dance Projects and is adjunct faculty at Towson University, where she teaches dance and Modern Repertory for Camera three days a week. Is there a "dream job" on the horizon for Foster? "I love all my work but it would be incredible to be able to be an artistic director full time. And to spend less time in traffic!" she exclaims.

All this activity circling around Foster is fulfilling, however. "I am most passionate about the theatrical work that I create and the relationships I can develop through that work in the community," she explains.

Dance legend Merce Cunningham has said, "You have to love dancing to stick to it. It gives you nothing back, no manuscripts to store away, no paintings to show on walls and maybe hang in museums, no poems to be printed and sold, nothing but that single fleeting moment when you feel alive." Angella Foster's work is more than a fleeting moment, however. "It is powerful for an audience to be able to draw out of someone else's experience their own story. I can't think of anything better," Foster says.

Eleanor Science Café Tues. Features John Mather Talk

The next Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) Eleanor Science Café will be held on Tuesday, March 15 from 3:30 to 7 p.m. in the school cafeteria. The program, "From the Big Bang to the Nobel Prize and on to James Webb Space Telescope and the Discovery of Alien Life," will feature Nobel scientist John Mather. The program was rescheduled from January because of inclement weather.

Mather will tell the history of the universe in a nutshell from the Big Bang to now and on to the future – how the Big Bang could produce an earth where sentient beings can live and how those beings are discovering their history. Mather, as project scientist for NASA's Cosmic Background Explorer (COBE) satellite, measured the spectrum of heat radiation from the Big Bang and discovered hot and cold spots in that explosion and hunted for the first objects that formed after the explosion.

Mather will explain Einstein's biggest mistake, show how Edwin Hubble discovered the expansion of the universe, how COBE was built and how it supports the Big Bang theory. He will also talk about plans for the next great telescope in space – the James Webb Space Telescope, for which he is senior project scientist. It will look even farther back in time than the Hubble Space Telescope, inside dusty cocoons where stars and planets are being born today. Planned for launch in 2014, the new telescope can examine earth-like planets around other stars; future missions may find signs of life there.

Mather is a senior astrophysicist at Goddard Space Flight Center here in Greenbelt, where he specializes in infrared astronomy and cosmology. He received his bachelor's degree at Swarthmore and his doctorate in physics at the University of California, Berkeley.

It was the work of Mather and his team on COBE that showed cosmic microwave background radiation has a blackbody spectrum that confirms the Big Bang theory and also discovered cosmic anisotropy (hot and cold spots in background radiation) believed to be the primordial seeds that led to the structure of the universe today, research for which Mather received the Nobel Prize in 2006. He has also received many other honors and awards and was one of Time Magazine's 100 Most Influential People in the World in 2007.

The first Mather lecture will take place from 3:30 to 5 p.m., followed by a musical interlude with refreshments from 5 to 6. The lecture will be repeated from 6 to 7 p.m.

Community Foundation Event Supports Group Achievements

by Cindy Henneberger

The Greenbelt Community Foundation (GCF) awarded two grants on February 27 at its second annual tea, held this year at the Greenbelt Marriott. GCF Advisory Board Members Dorrie Bates and Jim Cohen handed out checks and congratulations to the two awardees: Springhill Lake Elementary School's "Arts Integrated Extended Learning Opportunity" and Girl Scout Troop 4816's "Watershed Preservation and Restoration" program.

Springhill Lake Elementary

"We looked at how can we now bridge visual arts into instruction," Springhill Lake Elementary School Principal Natasha Jenkins said, accepting the grant for the school.

Esther Williams, the school art teacher, will head the new after-school program. It is designed to give students who have exceeded proficiency in reading and math the opportunity to learn visual arts, creative arts, dance and, possibly, theatrical training. Three groups of around 10 students each are planned for separate third, fourth and fifth grade classes.

Girl Scout Troop 4816

Shayna Coleman, 14, accepted the grant for her troop and reflected on its past work, like last year's trash-a-thon, where she reported they had picked up 400 pounds of litter. She also talked about future environmental endeavors the grant will help them to accomplish, such as building a rain garden, placing markers on storm drains to help prevent littering, building a nature trail and planting flowers.

They are on a timeline, she said. "We plan on finishing these projects before my fellow girl scouts and I enter high school," Coleman said.

In an interview after the tea, Cohen explained, "They're going to train younger scouts in everything that they've learned. So this will continue in perpetuity." Cohen, who sat on the GCF committee that reviewed the applications, was impressed not only by the troop's environmental work but also by their entrepreneurial efforts to raise funds from multiple sources.

Both sets of grantees represent some of the roadways the GCF has made into the community in a relatively short time. Only in its fourth year, the Foundation has touched a varied group of Greenbelt non-profits, cooperatives and new initiatives – from start up funds for the farmers market and grant money for the Chesapeake Education, Arts and Research Society's (CHEARS) Three Sisters Garden Project – to the Ladies of Charity of St. Hugh of Grenoble Church's food pantry, the Friends of the Greenbelt Museum's orientation video, Eleanor Roosevelt High School's band trip to China and a variety of local aspiring outreach programs.

Not Exclusive

Despite its growing reputation for good works, GCF Advisory Board Chair Emmett Jordan made it clear that the Foundation is determined to maintain streamlined operating costs. It has no vision to become a stodgy institution, he said.

"It's not meant to be a members-only club," Jordan said, explaining that the board deliberately set up term limits to prevent exclusivity. All are volunteers so the overhead is low, he noted. The figures back him up.

In its latest complete year, Fiscal Year 2010, the Foundation reported receiving $30,478 in gifts and approving $24,935 in grants. Their operating expenses were recorded as $4,307 and the rest have been designated as available funds.

Awarding grants twice each year since 2006, the GCF has given out a total of more than $70,000 in grants ranging from $450 to $5,000. "It's been a focus on projects not on programs," said Bill Duncan, Advisory Board treasurer.

Jordan explained that while foundations in general are required to disperse at least five percent of their endowments each year, the GCF, from its inception, was determined to go beyond that.

After covering expenses, he explained, that the board is committed to distributing half of its funds to programs and the other half to build the endowment fund. Jordan said they could do this because they were an all-volunteer organization with limited expenses. "We don't have an office. We don't have a phone."

"The Foundation only exists as a tool, as a bridge," Duncan concurred. "Most important, we've been able to help a long and growing list of very wonderful organizations in Greenbelt to bring about their vision."

Farmer's Market

As an early recipient of Foundation funds, Joe Gareri, vice president for the Greenbelt Farmers Market, was able to share how this worked.

"We would never have been possible if it wasn't for folks in the Foundation who realized that it does take money to bring a market to Greenbelt." Now in its fourth season, the farmer's market opened its tents in June 2008 with the aid of a $4,000 grant from the then-fledgling Community Foundation.

Gareri told patrons that although the market runs about 30 Sundays in the spring, summer and fall, the preparation for it is a year-round process with expenses such as insurance, application fees and internet site hosting.

While thanking the Foundation and its patrons, as well as the City of Greenbelt for its support, Gareri took time to talk about the market's plans for the coming season. Due to start on Sunday, May 8, Gareri reminded tea goers that this date not only coincided with the Green Man Festival but it was also Mother's Day. "So we're saying, bring your mother," he said, "or if not get something from the market and be sure to give it to her."

Gareri said there may be new booths at this year's market but he could not make promises since the application deadline for vendors is open until March 15. But he told attendees it would be an exciting year with great ideas for new things in the works to bring more people into the market, such as vendors who are organic farmers, some dairy producers, reliable bee product vendors and possibly a new vendor offering locally milled grains from the eastern shore.

Gareri said he hopes to attract people for more than shopping, such as music vendors with educational programs.

Eulalie Lucas, Advisory Committee vice chair, talked about the GCF's aid to programs like the farmers market. "Our funding is geared toward programs within the City of Greenbelt but the benefits of these programs extend beyond our city limits," she said, pointing out that people come from as far away as Clinton to attend the market.

Although Foundation grants are primarily for nonprofits and cooperatives, Bates reminded attendees that groups with strong Greenbelt community-based programs, such as the farmers' market, could still find ways to receive grants. In the market's case, she said, the Greenbelt Consumer Cooperative sponsored the start-up group. And this year's Springhill Lake Elementary School program went through its PTA organization for the grant.

New Grant Cycle

"We're very interested in funding new things," Duncan told tea goers. "We get excited when others get excited about solving problems or creating new opportunities or bringing things for all of us to enjoy."

Showing support for the GCF's work within the county, Ingrid Turner, chair of the Prince George's County Council, presented the group with a $2,500 check. "It's great to hear about the wonderful projects and the wonderful grants that the Greenbelt Community Foundation is giving out to the community," she said.

The county's check came at a time when the Foundation is busy preparing for reviewing its next round of grant awards. Jordan encouraged community groups to apply by the upcoming April 15 deadline.

As the tea concluded, Jordan thanked community partners who had helped with the event – PEP-CO, Mack-Cali and CVI Inc. as well as the Greenbelt Marriott – for their ongoing support of the GCF.

He also encouraged attendees to consider making a gift to the Foundation or a multi-year pledge, so the Foundation can anticipate how much is coming in. For those who did not attend the tea, Jordan has created a new GCF website that provides information and has pledge forms: www.greenbeltfoundation.net

"Above and beyond the contributions, we can use your help as volunteers," Jordan said.

Advisory Board member Barbara Havekost said she was pleased to report that nearly 100 people attended the afternoon tea. "I thought it was stupendous," she said. "It's always just a joy to see how responsive Greenbelters are to something like this."

Flute duo from the Eleanor Roosevelt High School Concert Band played for Foundation tea guests.
