

Who Is to Run Animal Control? Council Reviews City Structure

by James Giese

The Greenbelt City Council held a video conference work-session (see separate story on page 7) on March 19 with its consultant in California who had conducted an organizational study of the city government. Richard Brady, president of Matrix Consulting Group, reviewed for a second time his presentation of numerous recommendations for changes in the city's organization and operations this time with councilmembers asking more questions. Yet to be heard are comments and recommendations from City Manager Michael McLaughlin or departmental directors.

Earlier the council had reviewed transportation issues with area bus service representatives. (See separate story page 7.)

Mayor Emmett Jordan noted, in envy, the warmer weather Brady was experiencing (75 degrees) in California. Then he asked Brady to review his previous presentation (see story of January 9).

Brady first reiterated his view that the city provides extremely high levels of service, has a "clear and consistent customer service philosophy," has a budgetary process with "a high degree of transparency and accountability" and meets "a high proportion of 'best practice' service targets." He recommended, however that "the city needs to invest in its administrative infrastructure, especially relating to information technology."

Changes

Matrix made numerous detailed recommendations for change, noting which are of medium to high priority and which are targeted for the short term. Some recommendations can be accomplished without added costs, others come with an identified added cost price tag and some with undetermined costs. While the recommendations could lead to better decision-making by city management and council, thus leading to greater efficiency, no recommendations were made with identified direct cost savings.

The contractual cost for the Matrix study was $50,000. This included one meeting of Brady with council to review and discuss the consultant's recommendations which took place on December 16. The video conference was an extra item, McLaughlin said, of $1,000.

Many of the recommendations dealt with improvements to information technology (IT), the most significant being that IT should be placed directly under the city manager or assistant manager instead of in the Finance Department and that one to two additional IT persons should be added to staff at a cost of $50,000 each (plus fringe benefits). Of greater interest to councilmembers appeared to be a number of recommendations to shift city services from one department to another.

City Manager Presents Proposed Fiscal Year 2015 City Budget

by Thomas X. White

As expected, City Manager Michael McLaughlin provided the Greenbelt City Council with an overview of his proposed Fiscal Year 2015 City Budget at the March 24 regular meeting. While offering some bright spots regarding the city's outlook for the next fiscal year, he allowed that there is still not enough good news to indicate that the city is completely out of the woods.

He started his overview with the declaration that "this budget continues to deal with impacts from the 2008 recession." He said these impacts on the budget have caused revenues and expenditures to remain essentially flat for the past six years and that will continue to be the case for this year's FY-15 budget and will likely continue into Fiscal Year 2016.

Notwithstanding the recessionary impacts, especially reduced property values now down 20-25 percent for owner-residential properties, the manager noted that Greenbelt has managed the fiscal crisis with the leadership of council and staff efforts to identify over $2.7 million in savings, reductions and cuts to previous budgets.

Even with that dire picture, the proposed FY-15 budget will total just under $25.2 million, approximately $578,000 higher than for Fiscal Year 2014. The manager recommends no tax rate increase. Thus the city will hold its ground with higher assessments for Greenbelt rental apartments, lower tax abatements and higher street permit fees (mainly in the development taking place at Greenbelt Station, South Core).

While business/corporate property assessments were essentially flat and hotel/motel tax revenue was down, the city continues to benefit from income taxes, which have experienced steady growth over the past 10 years, he said.

Expenditures in the proposed FY-15 budget are about 1.4 percent higher than those last year ($343,800). The manager believes the budget will generally fund existing services and allow implementation of some of the recommendations contained in last year's city Organizational Assessment. While the Organizational Assessment report recommends five new positions, none is funded in the proposed budget. There are, however, three vacancies in current staffing in the city to be filled.

The proposed budget calls for no increase in inspection fees or waste collection bills. But the budget will call for increases in passes for the Aquatic & Fitness Center (up 3 percent) and daily admission fees (up 25 cents).

Capital Projects

Also putting pressure on the proposed budget is a growing list of capital projects. These include the long-awaited renovation of the historic Greenbelt theater; phase one of a five-year commitment to repair the earthen dam at Greenbelt Lake; a permeable parking lot for the Springhill Lake Recreation Center; replacement of the HVAC equipment at the Community Center and the need to replace the Aquatic Center roof.

If council opts to consider possible usage of a portion of the old Greenbelt Middle School (a possible five classrooms) the city manager noted that $50,000 could be budgeted utilizing funds from the Greenbelt West Infrastructure Fund.

Other FY-15 initiatives highlighted by McLaughlin included the effort to secure the location of the consolidated FBI Headquarters facility in Greenbelt West, continued development of a city economic development strategy, adding another volunteer Maryland Coordinator, implementing pedestrian/bicycle recommendations and seeking grant funding for "greening" of Cherrywood Drive. Others are to develop a tree master plan, a

Catherine Plaisant Alters Human-Computer Interaction

by Marat Moore

Catherine Plaisant

Catherine Plaisant's research has international impact, but is as personal as how you move your finger across a screen to unlock your cell phone or view your pictures on a tablet. This French-born Greenbelter is a research leader in the field of Human-Computer Interaction (HCI).

For more than 27 years, she has worked at the HCI Laboratory at the University of Maryland with a pioneer in the field, Ben Shneiderman. They collaborate on research and work with multidisciplinary teams to design and evaluate new interface technologies.

In 1991 – for computers, the Neolithic era – she worked on development of the "touch-screen slider," a technique later patented by Apple. Now the process is intuitive for millions of users.

"We always ask: Who are the users? What are their goals?" she said. "And later in the development process our questions are: Is this design useful? Is it useable? And sometimes, is it fun? That might be a goal."

In 1998 Plaisant led the effort to develop the first version of "LifeLines," a novel visual interface to summarize all the data from a patient's medical record in a single screen. "It showed all the patient's treatments, medications and flagged anything abnormal or severe, etc. The physician could quickly zoom in on the important details."

"It was too early for its time," she said. It took 10 years for electronic records to become common and LifeLines now is considered a landmark achievement in research on information visualization strategies. Her work has helped physicians to better analyze patients' health records and has inspired a generation of designers of medical and other applications dealing with temporal histories.

The Paris of Prince George's?

Given Plaisant's professional stature, my surprise in meeting her was that she is so down-to-earth. She enjoys biking, hiking in the forest and together with her partner, hosts a popular pumpkin-carving party for their GHI neighbors for Halloween even though they just moved to Greenbelt two years ago.

It's part of a balanced life that Plaisant enjoys in Greenbelt.

"Greenbelt is fantastic!" she said. "As a French person, it feels like home. You can walk everywhere and ride your bike. Going to the Co-op makes shopping fun."

She looked around their attractive one-bedroom GHI unit.

"My Parisian friends come to visit and say, 'This isn't small!' And they comment on my big backyard. For anyone who has lived in Paris or New York, the size of this unit is completely normal," she said, laughing.

"I was surprised at how

Double Reel and Meal At the New Deal

In addition to its usual Monday evening film (which was March 24th) the Reel and Meal has partnered with the Eleanor and Franklin D. Roosevelt Democratic Club to show Inequality for All on Sunday, March 30th. An optional, delicious vegan buffet served by Chef Karim will be available at 1:30 p.m. and the film begins at 2 p.m.

Inequality for All features Robert Reich – professor, best-selling author, and Clinton cabinet member – as he demonstrates how the widening income gap has a devastating impact on the American economy. Through his singular perspective, Reich explains how the massive consolidation of wealth by a precious few threatens the viability of the American workforce and the foundation of democracy itself. In this inconvenient truth for the economy, Reich uses humor and a wide array of facts to explain how the issue of economic inequality affects each and every one of us.

Following the film a discussion will be facilitated by Konrad Herling, Greenbelt City Council member and long-time member of the Eleanor and Franklin D. Roosevelt Democratic Club.

The Reel and Meal at the New Deal film series is a collaboration of three Greenbelt groups: Beaverdam Creek Watershed Watch Group, Green Vegan Networking and Prince George's County Peace & Justice Coalition.

If you have questions please contact Susan Barnett, susnbarn@earthlink.net or 443-388-2961. The New Deal Café is located at 113 Centerway in Old Greenbelt, 301-474-5642. For more information go to <http://newdealcafe.com/events/reelAndMeal/>.

Original Passover Play At Mishkan Torah

On Sunday April 6, at 5 p.m., Mishkan Torah Synagogue will welcome the Passover Season by presenting a gala extravaganza consisting of not one, not two, not three, but four major events. The headliner will be the premiere of a new play by Mishkan Torah and Greenbelt playwright Itsy Kliman entitled "Why Is This Year Different?" Kliman is a highly experienced and oft-produced writer who has been a resident of Greenbelt since 1970. The play is guaranteed to cause both laughter and lumps in the throat.

Prior to the play, Mishkan Torah's multi-talented education director Bret Goldstein will regale the house with Passover songs and narrative. The evening will also feature a delicious dinner catered by the Sisterhood. Finally, the evening will also include the annual Passover wine tasting featuring our resident Passover oenologist Mishkan Torah President Dan Lowery.

"Why Is This Year Different?" is a heart-warming, insightful original play about the misadventures of a contemporary family when the grown children are preparing to celebrate the Passover seder or festive holiday dinner. The play captures the mood, spirit, and theme of the Passover season in a modern context and provokes both laughter and more serious thought.

Itsy's son, Todd Kliman, is directing the production. The play revives a Mishkan Torah tradition over thirty years old by bringing back the Stage 18 Players. The audience will be able to enjoy the play in an intimate dinner theater setting, along with Goldstein's pre-play performance. The cast features both veteran and several new Mishkan Torah performers.

Take a break from your Passover preparations and start celebrating early by enjoying the entertainment. There is a fee. You may purchase tickets at the Synagogue at 10 Ridge Road, or on line at www.Mishkantorah.org.

Mishkan Torah Clean Up of Long Branch

Mishkan Torah's Social Action Committee is proud to present its first-ever "Reverse Tashlich" on Sunday, April 6 from 9 a.m. to noon. Traditionally performed on Rosh Hashanah (Jewish New Year), "Tashlich" refers to the Jewish custom of throwing crumbs into a body of water to symbolically rid oneself of bad habits.

In a modern twist, Mishkan Torah is sponsoring a "Reverse Tashlich," to reverse the effects of bad habits by helping to clean up a local stream. The stream is the Long Branch, also known as the Goddard Branch, of Beaverdam Creek. All are welcome to this event, which is being organized with the Beaverdam Creek Watershed Watch Group. The event coincides with the Anacostia Watershed Society's 2014 Earth Day Cleanup (anacostiaws.org) and the Greater Washington Jewish Community's Good Deeds Day 2014 (shalomdc.org). The meeting place will be between the end of Northway and the City of Greenbelt's mulch piles.

To participate, just show up on Sunday, April 6 at 9 a.m. with boots or sturdy shoes, work gloves, a water bottle, and long pants which can get wet. The event is free and open to the entire community.

For details email socialaction@mishkantorah.org. On April 6, call 301-919-6420. To learn more about Beaverdam Creek visit www.beaverdamcreek.org.

Condolences to the family and friends of June Fineran, who died March 19, 2014, at the age of 89. She was the mother of Peggy Shaffer of Lakewood and had resided for eight years at Green Ridge House. A funeral Mass was held at St. Hugh's church on March 24.

Congratulations to Eva Salmeron, a senior at Eleanor Roosevelt High School, who participated in the Latino Student Fund's (LSF) LISTO College preparation program and is a form LSF tutor. She has been accepted to the University of Maryland and has applied to the honors program there. Eva is a strong advocate for immigration reform and the Dream Act and was part of the immigration reform march on D.C. in August 2013. Eva is also a coordinator for the Project Hype (Hispanic Youth with Power and Education) college preparatory program at the University of Maryland. She will serve as a high school ambassador at LSF's Gala on March 13.

GREENBELT ANIMAL SHELTER

Herman Sherman was found running at large. He was very thin and had some sores on his feet and stomach. No one has come forward for him, so he is now looking for his forever home.

Stinker is a sweet, lively girl, just over a year old. Through no fault of her own she has grown up mostly in the shelter. She loves to go on walks or runs with volunteers, give kisses, or just bask in the sun. She knows her basic commands "sit" and "lie down" and is starting to walk very well on leash. Stinker is energetic and would make a great running partner. We fully expect she will calm down once out of the shelter environment since she tends to calm down quickly when taken out on walks. Please come visit Stinker- she has been in the shelter for quite some time and is still waiting patiently for her forever home. Stinker just wants to shower someone with the love she has to give.

The Animal Shelter really needs help with fostering dogs and cats. Please come in and talk with Lauren or Susie, the Animal Control Officers at the Shelter about any questions you might have. Fostering is a wonderful way to help an animal while they find their forever home!

nature. How various services are organized is to a great extent based upon nationally established uniform accounting guidelines in reporting their finances that Maryland law requires its local jurisdictions to follow. Although required to report revenues and expenses in a standard manner, local governments are not required to be structured in any standard way. In small governments, where not enough employees and equipment are available to sustain duplicative operations, it becomes particularly difficult to organize operations as a large governmental body might do.

For Greenbelt, a number of services have been difficult to place neatly within an organizational chart, one pyramidal in shape with an appointed city manager on top as the chief administrative officer responsible for management and direction of all city operations. Above the city manager in an organization chart is the elected council, assigned by the city charter with the responsibilities of establishing policies for city operations, approving the annual city budget, levying taxes to finance operations and appointing and supervising the manager.

Animal Control

Animal control is one service that has been difficult to place neatly. Over time it has been shifted among city departments in order to better meet the demands and expectations of city residents. While the standardized chart of accounts classifies animal control as a public safety function, it originally was assigned to the Greenbelt Public Works Department. Animal pens for holding stray animals were at the Public Works compound, with a part-time employee responsible for patrolling streets to pick up dogs and cats roaming at large. When this part-time employee was not at work other employees handled the unwelcome tasks of cleaning pens and handling urgent animal complaints. Enforcement actions, such as for cruelty to animals or dealing with vicious animals had to be undertaken by police officers.

As the city grew and enforcement matters became of greater concern, animal control became a responsibility of the police department, even though the animal pens themselves remained at Public Works. But this arrangement did not work well either. Police officers have no desire to capture or care for stray pets and the position of animal warden remained part-time.

More recently in a unique arrangement, animal control was placed within the Department of Planning and Community Development, seen as another aspect of code enforcement. Since then animal control services have expanded greatly. Now dedicated employees and volunteers provide around-the-clock care and find homes for unwanted pets instead of euthanizing them. A heated and air-conditioned animal shelter was also constructed in a separate building near the police station.

In its report, however, Matrix proposes still another shuffle for animal control. It recommends combining this service with the Recreation and Parks Department, thus forming a new Department of Community Services. This department would also include code enforcement and parking enforcement (now functions of the Department of Planning and Community Development).

Reaction

Councilmember Leta Mach said she did not believe that community services, such as animal control, should be under recreation. Brady responded that animal control is an odd function. In their work for other governments, they have seen it placed within many different departments. In one municipality, for example, the city clerk has been responsible for administering this service.

Councilmember Judith Davis wondered why animal control and code enforcement had not been assigned to be with police. Brady responded that it certainly could be there.

Jordan suggested that, with a community services department, it would be possible to have central locations to provide all customer services. It would not be necessary to go to one place for a dog license, another to sign up for a recreation program and yet another for a building permit.

Konrad Herling noted that at a recent National Municipal League conference, he and other councilmembers had been able to see a centralized desk operation in Bellevue, Wash. But Davis reminded them that much customer service can now be done online.

Special Employees

In small organizations, special arrangements are sometimes made between departments in order best to utilize the services of individual employees. In Greenbelt a mechanic who specializes in maintaining police cruisers, but who works in the Public Works facility, is under the supervision of the police. Another Public Works employee with engineering skills who transferred out of the Department of Community Development, continues to provide engineering work for his former department. Some park maintenance employees of the Public Works Department responsible for maintaining athletic fields and other facilities used for recreational programs receive direction from recreation staff. In fact, there is continuing discussion as to whether all parks maintenance work should be done as a part of a Park and Recreation Department instead of under the supervision of the Public Works Department.

In small cities such as Greenbelt, those arguing for public works note the similarity of work performed in parks and elsewhere, such as mowing along streets, at buildings and in parks. Specialized equipment, such as backhoes, need not thus be duplicated if parks is combined with public works. Those arguing for combining parks with recreation note, however the need for coordinating maintenance with programmed activities in parks and that parks are often a neglected stepchild to other public works activities.

In dealing with these issues, Matrix has recommended that the police mechanic be a member of the Public Works Department, that engineering work be a function of the Department of Planning and that all park maintenance be performed by Public Works.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts said he felt a need to resolve some of the issues that had at an earlier time led to the separation of the mechanic in the police department from the Public Works Department.

Fee Charges

Brady told council it was important to have cost-recovery studies done for all fee programs. That doesn't mean that all programs should have full cost recovery, he said, but that there was a need to have a policy on what to recover.

Davis said that recreation staff does consider cost recovery in setting program fees as well as in comparing fees charged, particularly for the swimming pool, with fees charged by other jurisdictions. She added, however, that council often changes staff recommendations on fees.

Putens said he was reluctant to charge residents high fees when they are already paying through their taxes for the facilities.

Stressed Staff

A number of comments by councilmembers expressed concern that demands for service, combined with declining revenue in recent years, had resulted in staff being placed under stress and that needed work had not been accomplished timely. Brady agreed, noting a number of recommendations to alleviate the situation, particularly by providing more persons in information technology and human resources. He also recommended giving added responsibilities to the assistant manager and, down the road, adding a second assistant.

Another concern to councilmembers was the potential for many senior employees to take retirement. Councilmember Edward Putens advocated the need to have backup for personnel who might soon retire. Jordan agreed; he said a future worksession should be devoted to this problem.

Next Step

Brady told council the next step should be to get responses from the city manager and department heads. With presentation of the budget due shortly, McLaughlin told council there would be a number of recommendations in the budget relating to the study but no new positions proposed, including those proposed by the consultant. McLaughlin suggested that budget review worksessions with department heads would be a good time to hear their thoughts on the organizational study. He also said he would pursue filling some vacant authorized positions that the council had requested not be filled until the organizational study was complete, since the study supports adding those positions.

Jordan said McLaughlin had already submitted his recommendations in a report he had prepared for the meeting. McLaughlin said that was not the case, that the report he had submitted was merely a summary of consultant recommendations for council to use as a working tool in monitoring actions to be taken and did not represent his thinking.

Jordan, however, insisted that the report constituted McLaughlin's recommendations and that the content differed from what the consultant had recommended. Putens and Mach, however disagreed. They had reviewed McLaughlin's summary, they said, and found it to accurately reflect the consultant's recommendations.

Davis said she had perused the report to determine what recommendations could be easily done, but found it was not that easy, because more money and added staff would be required for implementing the recommendations.

Jordan felt it was important to pursue the recommendations expeditiously. He proposed a special Tuesday night worksession on April 1 to meet with McLaughlin to hear his comments on the consultant's report. Other councilmembers concurred.

Roosevelt Center

Also set was an April 16 worksession with Roosevelt Center merchants to discuss the impact of temporarily closing the movie theater for renovations and to consider permitting food vendor trucks to operate during center special events.

James Giese is a former Greenbelt City Manager.

new playground at Belle Point, and to expand the public accessibility of local crime information. The manager closed his budget presentation with some hope for the future if the gods are favorable, saying:

- Greenbelt property reassessment by the State will occur in 2015 and should favorably impact Fiscal Year 2017
- The South Core residential development could add $60 million in value by FY-17
- Greenbelt is successful in attracting the FBI to Greenbelt West

There was little council reaction to the manager's presentation. Mayor Emmett Jordan noted the difficulty with flat revenues. He was pleased that the Organizational Assessment had been factored into the proposed budget and expressed the view that the budget situation will require more effort and transparency and that council has a lot of work ahead of it.

McLaughlin said the availability of the printed budget document had been hindered by the inclement weather and that it should be available later in the week. He wondered if council really needed the printed book. The nearly uniform response was, "I prefer the book."

Members felt that council review of the budget at upcoming worksessions often requires them to refer to various parts of the budget, which would be difficult to do with electronic media.

At any rate, the proposed FY-15 budget is available on the city web site and on disk. Council review of the proposed budget begins at a Wednesday, March 26 worksession and continues through May. Two Public Hearings on the proposed budget (April 28 and May 27) will be held. Budget adoption usually occurs at the first regular council meeting in June.

liberated I felt living in a small unit," she said. "It's a tiny carbon footprint and is extremely comfortable. My financial anxieties about retirement have evaporated, and you can clean up everything in 30 minutes – with a partner."

Creative Collaboration

This stellar scientist traveled an interesting path to Greenbelt and the HCI Lab. In her education in France and transatlantic career, Plaisant has adhered to a personal principle that has paid off in career satisfaction.

"I always chose the direction that offered more options, that opened the most doors," she said. In high school, she was good at science and math but said she had "had no clue" about a career. She loved the outdoors and considered architecture and surveying "because the work was outside and had math involved."

In Lille and Paris as a university student, she studied engineering – only one percent were women – and graduated early. She pursued a PhD in industrial engineering. Her thesis? Designing a voice recognition system to allow quadriplegic users to turn pages on mechanical book readers, turn lights off and on and do other tasks.

Her PhD in hand, she worked for a few years in a French research center, where she met the American who would become her husband and moved with him to the United States.

"I never thought I'd stay in the U.S. for more than a few years. I was just looking for a job," she said, laughing, since it's been nearly 30 years. But the opportunity to work with Shneiderman at the HCI Lab has kept her here and fully engaged.

Creative collaboration is the key to good designing of new ways for people to interact with technologies. "HCI draws from computer science, information science, psychology and others, depending on the project, like physicians or sociologists," she said. "Working with doctoral students, we begin by building small, then discuss the design and run evaluations with users." The goal is to build an "inspirational prototype" – which will act as a catalyst and inspire new ways to use technology.

After meeting Catherine Plaisant, I think: Forget the prototype. She's pure inspiration.

Smith Center Hosts Seagirl – Twice

The Clarice Smith Performing Arts Center presents a free program, "Seagirl," on Saturday and Sunday, March 29 and 30 at 3 p.m. How does one cope when everything one has learned begins falling apart? Sam Mauceri's original work "Seagirl" utilizes theatre, dance and movement to explore a young woman's attempts at unpacking her own prejudices in a world that wishes she wouldn't. Feminist punk music and a longing for radical ideas invade a culture of conventionality in this partnership between the School of Theatre, Dance, and Performance Studies and The Weekday Players, which will be held at the Cafritz Foundation Theatre.

Transportation Officials Meet Here with Council

by James Giese

The Greenbelt City Council held one of its bi-annual transit worksessions with representatives of the Washington-Metropolitan Area Transit Administration (WMATA), Prince George's County Department of Public Works and Transportation (DPW&T), operators of The Bus, and the Maryland Department of Transportation (MDOT) on Wednesday, March 19. The meeting time had been moved up to 7:30 and limited to one hour in order to accommodate a teleconference worksession on an organizational study that was postponed from Monday by inclement weather. The meeting's purpose was to get updates on transit operations in the city and to consider proposed improvements. Matt Johnson, representing Transit Riders United of Greenbelt (TRU-G), also attended.

Lou Farber of DPW&T The Bus told council that since he last met with them in July, there had been major changes in the organization of his department and that longtime acting director Darrell Mobley had now been confirmed as department director. Farber felt that, in the long term, there would be significant transit improvements.

Tomika Monterville, now chief of the Planning Section in the Division of Transit of DPW&T, also attended the meeting. She said she would be working closely with WMATA and expected to see both short-term and long-term transit improvements. The county has never had a clear plan for transit services before, she told council.

15X Change

Farber announced one route change sought by the city and TRU-G. As of March 10, route 15X of The Bus will stop at Greenway Center. This express bus runs from the Greenbelt to the New Carrollton METRO stations. Farber credited the change to Greenbelt activist Bill Orleans. He told council that Orleans had come to his office and suggested a change in the route shortening the time it took to run between the two stations, thereby enabling the extra stop. Farber thought it was a good idea and quickly put it into effect.

Councilmember Judith Davis told Farber he should remember that a lot of people in Greenbelt were also pushing for this change. Mayor Emmett Jordan turned to Orleans, who attended the meeting, thanking him for his efforts.

Sean Egan, director of the Washington Area Transit Office, MDOT, reported that the state provides financial assistance for The Bus but more for Ride On in Montgomery County. Most state funding however, goes to METRO, where $85 million is allocated for costs in Prince George's and $60 million for costs in Montgomery County. This amounts to about two-thirds of the cost of rail service in the two jurisdictions.

City Planner Terri Hruby told council that transit ridership was fairly flat and that on-time service was slightly down. James Hamre of WMATA said on-time performance was at 92 percent. Johnson noted the importance of being on time to riders who must make transfers from one bus to another.

Hamre said drivers of buses ahead of schedule will hold over at route stops to keep on time. This can be irritating to riders, however.

Snow Plan

In response to Johnson's concern about reduced service during snow events, Hamre noted that for the first time METRO had used a structured plan for snow emergencies. There are now three levels of service for snow: light, for which full service will be maintained; moderate, for which partial service will be operated that avoids hills and narrow streets; and heavy, where service is temporarily halted. For the St. Patrick's Day snowfall, service was canceled in the morning, was partial in the afternoon and then full by night.

Alternate schedules and maps for each snow event were posted at stops. "We did not necessarily get it right," Hamre said. He added that he was looking for feedback from riders.

In planning for the future, Hamre said 550 added buses would be needed over the next decade for the most ambitious plan. A scaled-back plan would require 340 buses. To maintain the basic plan, two additional buses are needed.

Davis asked Hamre if METRO was planning bus route changes to accommodate the new Purple Line. He responded that a study had been done in 2007 and that while some revisions would be needed, he expected no major changes to take place.

Johnson listed for the transit officials and council some of the other TRU-G concerns:

- The Bus drops riders off 850 feet from the METRO station entrance, should be closer;
- If new FBI headquarters is located at Greenbelt, transit riders should be first considered in any changes to METRO service;
- There is a difficulty in buses meeting at the same time at Greenway after leaving Greenbelt METRO station because of differing routes.

Climate Action Dirty Energy Show

Greenbelt Climate Action Network (GCAN) will feature the Dirty Energy Road Show at its meeting Wednesday, April 2, starting at 7 p.m. in Room 114 of the Greenbelt Community Center. Presenter Eric Blevins, an environmental activist from Tennessee, will outline ways energy pollutes the planet, along with ways to resist them.

The Dirty Energy Road Show examines the parallels of coal and nuclear power issues and connects them to other forms of dirty energy, including fracking of natural gas. It also examines mining processes, how power plants work, waste issues, impacts on the health of humans and ecosystems and planetary climate change. Blevins' slide show also illustrates how communities and grassroots organizations like Mountain Justice and RAMPS are fighting back against mountaintop removal, coal slurry impoundment, waste dumps and other polluting facilities. Free information as well as books, posters and DVDs will be available for a small donation.

Blevins, who has been traveling across America since 2006, has spoken on hundreds of college campuses about mountaintop removal and nuclear power issues. His home is close to the Watts Bar nuclear power plant in Tennessee.

He has worked with Students for Environmental Action to promote college purchases of green power and is a founding member of the Tennessee Alumni and Students for Sustainable Campuses. The past eight years he has been working with Mountain Justice against mountaintop removal coal mining. He sat on a panel at the Appalachian Studies Association Conference on this issue as well. His many direct actions to resist the coal industry include a nine-day tree sit-in January 2010, undertaken to stop blasting on a mountaintop removal site near the Brushy Fork coal sludge impoundment in West Virginia.

Council Enters Modern Age With a Video Conference

by James Giese

The Greenbelt City Council took another step into the modern age of communications at its Wednesday, March 19 worksession by conducting a video conference with Richard Brady, president of Matrix Consulting Group. The video conference concerned an organizational assessment study the consultants had performed (see separate story). Brady, in his office in Mountain View, Cal. (on San Francisco Bay), was projected on a screen in the City Council Chambers.

The meeting originally planned for Monday night, had been postponed because of Monday's snowfall, requiring Greenbelt CARES to make other facility arrangements for its normal Wednesday night counseling session.

From the city's point of view, the video conference worked well. The only glitch occurred when Brady, reaching for something on his desk, accidentally moved his laptop camera to provide a close-up view of his very nice tie. From Brady's end, however, the conference was only partially successful; he could fully hear council but he could not see them.

From the perspective of those in the audience observing the meeting, the arrangement left much to be desired. Councilmembers were crowded at a smaller table with their backs to the audience, as was Greenbelt City Manager Michael McLaughlin. Lights had been turned off over the council table so the video screen could be better seen. For the earlier worksession on transit, also held that night, but not a teleconference, transit officials had sat under the projection screen, facing council and the audience.

Although councilmembers partially obstructed the view, that was still better than at normal meetings where guests sit with their backs to the audience so councilmembers can face the audience. City Clerk Cindy Murray sat on the podium at the formal council table, as did Planner Teri Hruby for the transit worksession.

Also on the podium were two cameras to telecast the meeting live to anyone watching on the city's cable channel. One camera was aimed at the projection screen to show Brady (a direct feed not being used); the other focused on council. City Communications Specialist Beverly Palau said that she felt the problem at Brady's end in viewing council was due to an incorrect telecommunications hookup that could have been corrected if the call had been replaced.

All telecast city meetings are accessible for later video streaming on the city website, greenbeltmd.gov.

Journalism Students Meet at News Review Seminar

by Tisha Claudia Lim

At the beginning of each new academic semester, the News Review welcomes journalism students from the University of Maryland, College Park to attend the student orientation day with the purpose of introducing them to the staff members and city council members as well as briefing them on the writing rules and style that the News Review uses.

Journalism students who enrolled in journalism, an intensive course that requires each student to produce 10 clips by the end of the semester, can meet those goals by writing for a community newspaper. Each article for the News Review will qualify as a clip. Hence, students will serve as writers throughout the semester.

The News Review successfully kicked off its spring student orientation on Saturday, February 22. Unlike the previous semester in which the orientation consisted of only Maryland students, this semester's orientation included three Eleanor Roosevelt High School seniors, a sophomore at DuVal High School and a self-published author. All were present because they share the same passion for writing as well as the same goal, which is to contribute articles for the News Review.

Attendees gathered at the newsroom at 9 a.m., chatted among themselves and were introduced to staff members and then to Greenbelt Mayor Emmett Jordan and City Councilmember Judith Davis. It is important for students to build relationships with councilmembers because they may need to interview them for future articles.

Mayor Jordan said that council members are generally easy to get in touch with for interviews. "Council members are very accessible. You can call me up on the phone or send me an email," he said. But he also cautioned that at times it will be hard for him to get back to students due to his busy schedule.

"So the best way is to send me an email telling me that you're trying to reach me and what your story is about and the questions you would like to ask me...I will let you know a time that you can call," he said.

After the formal introduction, News Review Assistant Editor Altoria Bell Ross introduced students to the News Review's editorial staff and the board of directors. Students also learned some of the history of the city and the News Review.

Ross also reminded the students that the goal of the newspaper is to "provide a voice for the Greenbelt community."

President Eileen Farnham emphasized to students the importance of adhering to the style and deadline set by the News Review. As an example, she said, "In the News Review, serial commas are not allowed."

Mary Lou Williamson, editor of the News Review, talked passionately about the libel court case involving the News Review. In 1970, the U.S. Supreme Court, in an unanimous decision, reversed the libel judgment issued against the News Review brought by a local developer, Charles Bresler, who accused the paper of libeling him by publishing an article written by reporter Dorothy Sucher about a city council meeting at which a citizen described a Bresler proposal as "blackmail." The decision was a clear victory for Freedom of the Press, according to Williamson.

In 2013, the Dorothy Sucher Memorial Award was inaugurated, providing an internship with $300 stipend awarded to a chosen journalism student each semester. The internship is funded by the late Dorothy Sucher's husband Joe Sucher.

After the presentation, students were encouraged to sign up for stories in which they were interested. Among the stories to be covered were city council worksessions, Greenbelt Homes meetings and African History and Culture Lecture Series.

Students will also cover a variety of other events this semester, including the monthly Artful Afternoons, Annual Egg Hunt and Earth Day and Arbor Day celebrations.

Eleanor Roosevelt High School senior Dayo Adebajo said she would like to get involved with the News Review because she "really likes writing" and is part of the Greenbelt community. A similar sentiment was expressed by Chiamaka Ogwuegbu, also a senior at Eleanor Roosevelt High School, who has been accepted to Stanford University and intends to pursue a degree in communications.

"I thought I should just try writing [for the News Review] since I am interested in journalism. I called two weeks ago and [Ross] invited me," she said.

Before concluding the orientation, Ross gave students a walking tour around Greenbelt during which they were shown a variety of locations which might be covered in future stories.

Student orientations by the News Review are funded with a grant awarded by the Greenbelt Community Foundation.

Tisha Claudia Lim is a journalism student at the University of Maryland and the News Review intern.

Beijing Robbed Two Nights in a Row

Two break-ins occurred last week at the Beijing Restaurant, an anchor business in Roosevelt Center. In both cases, the cash box was stolen. The first robbery was reported on Friday, March 21. It occurred in the overnight hours, when a person or persons gained entry by shattering a glass door facing the parking area on Centerway. A passerby called the police early the next morning to report the shattered door.

After the door was repaired, the same thing happened again around 2:15 a.m. on Saturday, March 22. The same door was shattered, entry was gained and the cash box was stolen. A witness to the second break-in called police to report the sound of glass breaking, and saw a man running from the area and carrying something. A canine-unit officer responded, and the investigation into both incidents continues.

George Mathews, public information officer for the Greenbelt Police Department, described the dual break-ins as "very unusual."

"I don't recall ever having back-to-back break-ins at the same business," he said.

For Manager David Chen, it's been a nerve wracking experience. "It's terrible," he said, adding that in 20 years of working at the restaurant, they had had no problems until three months ago, when a break-in occurred in December.

Mathews noted the spate of break-ins at Roosevelt Center over the last few months. Two businesses targeted were the Sunoco gas station and Meli Melo eatery. Cameras are placed around Roosevelt Center, and police patrols in the area are "being adjusted," Mathews said, which occurs whenever crime flares in an area of the city.

Greenbelt Middle School Has Renovation Meeting

by David Lange

Peggy Higgins, an elected Board of Education member, held a public hearing on March 12 at the (new) Greenbelt Middle School (GMS). In addition to presentations and audience participation about academics and budgets, status information was provided about the (old) GMS building. Sarah Woodhead, director of the Capital Improvement Program for the county school system, described the renovations being done to the old school (see the News Review article of March 13). She also mentioned that the 1969 administrative wing would be torn down because of poor mortar conditions and the resulting open space may be used for a playground.

On January 10, 2013, the Board of Education approved three uses for the old GMS building – the French Immersion School, a large area for swing space for emergency relocation of northern county schools and rental of five rooms to the City of Greenbelt. Woodhead said the swing space has been eliminated and the rooms are still available to the city.

A new name for the old building has not been selected yet, so there will continue to be two nearby signs stating Greenbelt Middle School.

Lady Raiders Rebound as State Champions

Genealogical Society Meets

by Patrick Gleason

The Eleanor Roosevelt Lady Raiders wanted to leave no doubt. The team was adamant that last year's state semifinal loss did not reflect their capabilities. And after steamrolling through a lineup of talented squads in the 2014 regional and state playoffs, they have done just that - with a state championship trophy to prove it.

The Lady Raiders cemented their run as one of the most dominant teams in recent state history with a never-in-doubt 64-30 victory against North Point High School Saturday, March 15. Roosevelt jumped out to an 18-point halftime lead and continued to suffocate the Eagles with a swarming defense until the final buzzer. Their defense frustrated North Point into a 9-of-53 field goal shooting record on the afternoon. Freshman Octavia Wilson was the game's high scorer with 20 points, complemented by the usual suspects: junior Tolu Omokore (15 points and 20 rebounds) and sophomore Kaila Charles (16 points and 10 rebounds).

It was a flawless playoff run. The Raiders finished their perfect 26-0 season with an average postseason victory margin of 34.2 (trumped only by their season average of 38.9 points). Their opponents were no slouches either. In the regional playoffs, the Raiders defeated squads from Bowie and Flowers that were ranked by The Washington Post for the majority of the season; in the state playoffs they overwhelmed a 23-3 Paint Branch High team before avenging last year's loss to a North Point team that had won all but one of its 24 victories by a double-digit margin.

After celebrating this year's victory, the Raiders' eyes will look to next season—when their entire squad returns for a state title defense.

Who Is God? GAC Explores “The Creation of the World”

by Jim Link

The Creation of the World and Other Business, now at the Greenbelt Arts Center, is Arthur Miller's angry, lengthy, probing parody of the early chapters of the book of Genesis. Miller gives the biblical version of how this glorious globe and our primal parents came to be, along with the origin of evil, strong satirical treatment. His play is saturated with broad humor, lambent mockery and intense theological debate.

The magnificent production by Off the Quill (OTQ), with its kinetic, imaginative choreography, its simple, colorful costuming and its skillful sound and set design delighted a very enthusiastic opening night audience of 35. OTQ is a new experimental theater company which blends many different mediums and emphasizes dance, physicality, clowning, music and stage combat.

Its gaudy, energetic, bold interpretation of Miller's words succeeds brilliantly. OTQ's production delights the eye, opens the mind, teases the intellect.

At the core of the play lies Lucifer's faux-friendly rivalry with God. The sleek, persuasive, intellectually agile, corrosively jealous rebel angel argues plausibly, if vainly, against God's (il) logic in forbidding Adam and Eve to taste the Fatal Apple and in whimsically preferring Abel's sacrifice (lamb) over Cain's (crops). Thomas Stratton is Lucifer, a wonderfully slimy fellow indeed.

Brian Moors, who plays God, could easily have coasted through his role by simply being regal and thunderous. But Moors avoids giving us a dull, one-dimensional Creator; his is a nuanced, complicated rendering of God's interiority and tentativeness. An occasional raised eyebrow, pregnant pauses, thoughtful tenderness suffuse his really impressive performance.

After the show I schmoozed an audience member who commented, “Tonight, I'm the mother of God.” She was not delusional - Lelia Zanner Moors is Brian's mom.

Asked how God did that night, the mother of God said, “He's going to have to go back to school for humility lessons.”

Joel Lorenzetti's Adam is a big affable bear of a fellow intent on living the Edenic dream, avoiding forbidden fruit. The lovely Casey Lefflue, as Eve, is much shrewder, more curious, ergo more susceptible to the charms of Lucifer, which are primarily cerebral, but also erotic.

Tellingly, her first word is “Why?” when God orders her not to taste of the Tree of Knowledge. Lucifer coaches Eve in the fine art of being fruitful and multiplying as myriads of theologians have inferred, eating the apple - sex - the first sin.

Joe Roberts and Eben Kuhns work very harmoniously together as Cain and Abel - up to a point, of course. Their debates about shepherding vs. farming are engaging. The mark of Cain, which protects him from being murdered during his life of wandering, is a hideous rictus - an effective touch.

“Cain is banished by God.” (Joe Roberts as Cain and Brian H. Moors as God).

“Lucifer torments Eve.” (Thomas Stratton and Casey Lefflue as Lucifer and Eve)

“Physicality” is a key word in OTQ's credo. Literally everyone in the cast is athletic - they sing, dance, act and leap with agility.

From the get-go the audience is immersed in a swirling, tight, precise choreography of light emerging from darkness, vegetation and animals coming to be in the midst of a dazzle of colors, silks, flags, fans and music - presided over by God, the Great Fabricator.

Eve dances with God - a stately waltz. Eve dances with Adam and a passel of angels - a rollicking square dance, Eve dances with the devil - an erotic writhe! The mother of us all! Who knew?

Tamiaka Chavis is Chemuel, the Angel of Mercy who desperately directs the heavenly choir, whose many Hallelujahs attempt to placate God's neediness.

Elliott Bales, a quite spooky Azrael, the Angel of death, doubles as a tree in the Garden supporting the Serpent curled round his neck - yes, that's Lucifer/Stratton, a full grown man!

Clearly, Kathleen Moors (choreographer and sister of God), Katie Wanschura (director/costumes/sound design), Patrick Mullen (producer/lighting/set design), Elise Berg (costumes) and Leanne Dinverno (costumes) all deserve kudos.

“Who is God?” the last act asks rhetorically. Lucifer claims that God is incomplete without His shadow side, Lucifer himself. “I am God's corrective symmetry,” he boasts. “You are the spirit of infinite permission,” God accuses Lucifer.

One caveat: Arthur Miller wrote this play in 1972, long after his iconic successes. Death of a Salesman, The Crucible, A View From the Bridge were years behind him and he never recaptured that lightning. TCOTW is overly long (two and a half hours), with some wince-producing, sophomoric humor.

But the OTQ's production deserves acclaim. Attention must be paid!

TCOTW is at the GAC through April 5. Fridays and Saturdays at 8 p.m., Sundays at 2 p.m.
