New Maglev Report Details Route and Station Options

by Gary Childs

Este artículo está disponible en español en nuestra página web www.greenbeltnewsreview.com.

Its backers say that the Superconducting Magnetic Levitation (maglev) high-speed train proposal will ease traffic congestion in the region and provide jobs, and introduce a new, cutting edge technology to improve transportation in the Baltimore-Washington and ultimately Northeast region. Its opponents counter that it will do little to improve traffic for most commuters, will have adverse effects on the environment and will be an expenditure of billions of dollars better used to repair and improve existing roads and public transportation systems. The controversial maglev project reached a milestone last Thursday in the publication of the Final Alternatives Report, available at bwmaglev.info/index.php/project-documents/reports.

The report looks closely at the two route alternatives (along with the no-build alternative) and also refines and narrows options for where the three maglev stations, in Washington, Baltimore and at BWI, will be located.

According to the report, the purpose of the maglev project is to “evaluate, and ultimately construct and operate a safe, revenue-producing, high-speed ground transportation system that achieves the optimum operating

Elementary Educator Extols Extent of ESOL Programs

Springhill Lake Elementary School

After dismissal, sounds of laughter fill the hallways of Springhill Lake Elementary. Inside the colorful classrooms, dedicated teachers gleefully chat as they finish up the day’s tasks. Among them is Maria Frontanes, an English as a Second Language teacher and program coordinator who has been at the school for nine years.

“Our school has a plethora of programs,” Frontanes said. Two of their most popular programs, Reading Together and Imagine Learning, focus on development and enhancement for ESOL students. “We have 13 languages spoken within our families of the building,” Frontanes added.

Of the 888 students enrolled in Springhill Lake Elementary, 382 – or 43 percent – are ESOL students and 91 are international students. Nearly 50 percent of the school’s students are Hispanic, Frontanes said. The diverse student population contributes to the success of ESOL programs like Reading Together and Imagine Learning, which are funded by the federal program Title III to assist and benefit ESOL students.

Reading Together is a cross-grade-level instructional program in which fourth and fifth grade ESOL students tutor second grade ESOL students, teaching them reading comprehension and reading fluency. The student

Boys to Men Provides Male Role Models and Support

by Jamal Williams

Xavier Heron, a senior at Eleanor Roosevelt High School, is navigating life as many teenagers do – going to school, getting good grades and enjoying time with his friends. Rather than excel in sports or business, his goal is to major in fashion design at the university of his choice. “I like fashion and it is something I have always been interested in pursuing,” Heron said. However, he does struggle to cope with adolescent challenges without a consistent male role model in his life. A safe space for young men to talk about their particular issues is Boys to Men of Greater Washington.

Boys to Men of Greater Washington specializes in creating a safe space where young men can talk about the events, emotions and experiences in their lives. It is a program dedicated to helping young men between the ages of 14 and 18 who don’t have a

Greenbelt Residents Manage Medical Marijuana Dispensary

by Matt Arbach

Este artículo está disponible en español en nuestra página web www.greenbeltnewsreview.com.

Married couple and Greenbelt residents for 25 years James Riordon and Martha Heil are part of the public face of AltPharm, a licensed local dispensary for medical marijuana (cannabis). Maryland legalized medical marijuana in 2012 and there are now nearly 100 dispensaries established in the state, 70 of which are operational. Riordon and Heil set up a booth at the Greenbelt Farmers Market on November 4 to spread the word about their product and to aid those interested in getting an account in the online registration system.

AltPharm opened in April 2018 and is in Suitland, a location that provides easy access to the Beltway and Metro’s Green Line. Heil was pleased to share what she referred to as the “exciting medical landscape” of their product that she pointed out has “a myriad of ways to use.” AltPharm was created by James Patrick Riordon, Riordon’s son, and Marguerite Santos. It currently employs 10 people but expects to increase its staffing and hours. Riordon is aiming to get the word out and to add to its growing register of patients.

At their market booth, Riordon and Heil used a laptop to help those interested begin the application process with the Maryland Medical Cannabis Commission (MMCC). Qualifying disorders include cachexia, anorexia, glaucoma, various types of pain,

On Screen

With vacation, there is time for movies. The Old Greenbelt Theatre features three recently released movies this week.

Tea with Dames

Dame Judi Dench, Dame Maggie Smith, Dame Eileen Atkins, and Dame Joan Plowright. When four aging super-stars of the stage and screen get together for a weekend, the audience hears about inauspicious beginnings, husbands both on stage and off, favorite and less-than favorite roles, actors who couldn't keep their hands to themselves, and song. Directed by Roger Michell, the documentary is filmed while the friends stay at Plowright's country estate.

The Happy Prince

In Rupert Everett's directing debut, Oscar Wilde's life is laid bare as Wilde (played by Everett) lies dying on a bed in a cheap hotel in Paris and wonders if his life was worth the costs. Well feted for his plays that packed theaters in the late 1800s, Wilde was known for an ironic, acerbic, intellectual wit. In 1895, Wilde was convicted of "gross indecency" — that is, having an affair with a man. He was sentenced to two years hard labor, and died, alone three years after his release. (He was pardoned posthumously as were 50,000 others in 2017.) In this biography-style film, Wilde examines the writing, the plays, the wit, and above all the love which measures the worth of them all. The movie features his wife Constance (Emily Watson), and friends (Colin Firth), and Robbie Ross (Edwin Thomas).

A Star is Born

In this fourth remake of the 1937 film, Bradley Cooper directs and stars as the hard-drinking aging star who falls in love with a promising young performer (Lady Gaga) and pushes her career, even as his own shows are waning in popularity. The show features plenty of music by both artists.

ERHS Artwork On View At GAC

The Greenbelt Arts Center is currently hosting an exhibit of artwork by art class students from Eleanor Roosevelt High School. Seventeen outstanding pieces of art, gathered by art teacher Christine Wilkin and other members of the ERHS art department staff, are on display in the GAC lobby during the run of the rock musical The Toxic Avenger, sporting titles such as Saturnalia, Jack and the Box, Midnight Flame, Blood Myrtle, Cold Reminiscence and Lord Goat Man. The intricacy and finish of the wonderfully creative works – which encompass a wide variety of artistic media, including water colors, ink, collage and photography – clearly show that the student artists invested a great deal of time and effort in producing them.

The exhibit will be on display through late November. GAC's handicapped-accessible lobby is open to the public for viewing the free art exhibit (from 7 to 8 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays, and from 1 to 2 p.m. Sundays). Persons wishing to view the exhibit at another time should call Gallery Manager Linda Thompson at 301-552-3964 to make arrangements.

Thoughtful Discussion At MakerSpace

"Tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all." Is that true? Do the benefits of the one-time love outweigh the pain of the loss? The thoughtful discussion group that meets at the MakerSpace on Tuesdays will bring their hearts and minds to bear on the question of lost love on November 27 from 7 to 9 p.m. All who wish to explore that topic are welcome to share their thoughts and cheerful banter.

Craft Fair Saturday At the Legion

Anyone looking for a unique gift item may very well find it at the American Legion Auxiliary's Craft Fair on Saturday, November 24 – Small Business Saturday. Over 30 vendors will offer mainly handcrafted items for gifts, decorations or a personal special treat. Of course there will be jewelry as well as scarves, soaps, fudge, ornaments, children's books (two authors will be present), table decorations and wreaths.

The fair will be in the main hall of American Legion Post 136 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. There will be door prizes every 15 or 20 minutes, a Chinese auction and light refreshments on sale. There is no admission charge. Come on up, avoid the shopping center crowds, browse for that perfect gift, have a snack and maybe win a door prize.

A Family's Story

Postscript to the Kristallnacht Remembrance Service

by Eva Choper

Ed note: This article was written in response to a talk given at Mishkan Torah Synagogue on November 9 and 10.

In 1930 my parents were living separately in Berlin, Germany, under the Weimar Republic. They had separate jobs and had met in Vienna, Austria. Dad had an avid hobby of photography and was a chemist for what is today BASF, then part of IG Farben. Mother was a secretary in a company that had international clients. She was fluent in French, German, English and Esperanto, a language designed for international business used in the late 19th and early 20th century. It was a time when Germany was experiencing wild runaway inflation that was destroying peoples' savings, forcing many people into poverty.

In 1932, Hitler and his National Socialist Party (Nazis) won a plurality in the Reichstag and was asked by the German president to form a government. Hitler was sworn in as chancellor on January 30, 1933.

On February 27, 1933, the building where the parliament met, the Reichstag, was destroyed by a suspicious fire. Hitler announced that the fire was set by Jewish communists. Within a few hours a riot occurred in which most Jewish-owned stores in Berlin were destroyed, an eerie foreshadowing of Kristallnacht five years later.

Dad documented those riots with his camera, and was momentarily arrested by the Gestapo, who took his camera and his Austrian passport. The Austrian Embassy replaced his passport, and the Gestapo returned his camera – without the film. He also wrote a photo diary of the three years, 1930 to 1933, which I donated to the National Holocaust Museum.

While at work during the following weeks, Dad's apartment was rifled twice by the Gestapo. The Austrian Embassy replaced a second passport. But when asked to replace a third passport, Dad was told by the Ambassador, "Tonight you go to sleep in Vienna."

Dad took the advice. But before he left Berlin, Dad applied for a job transfer within IG Farben to any other European site within the company. Mother agreed that it was dangerous to remain in Berlin, but since the Gestapo did not know about her, she packed up Dad's personal items and her items and joined Dad in Vienna.

Condolences to the family and friends of News Review staffer Jennifer Robinson, who died on Tuesday, November 20 after fighting a brain tumor for many years.

Congratulations to Claire Parkinson, who was inducted into the American Academy of Arts and Sciences on October 6.

Turning Point PARCC Scores; Search for New Location

by Matt Arbach

Turning Point Academy currently shares a building with Trinity Assembly of God church.

A visitor to Turning Point Academy (TPA) is greeted in the school foyer by a placard affirming the five words that encapsulate the school's character-driven mandate: courage, concern, curiosity, integrity and leadership. In the busy hallways, students in maroon and gray stand eagerly in line for their next class, radiating joy and a sense of family.

Currently, TPA serves a total of 594 students, kindergarten through 8th grade. The proportion of male to female students is nearly equal and 71 percent of the students are part of the Free and Reduced Student Meals (FARM) program. Second and fourth grades comprise the two largest classes, 76 and 73 students, respectively, and African-American students comprise 89 percent of the student body.

Among the staff, 83 percent are designated as highly qualified with over 50 percent possessing advanced professional certificates. This year TPA welcomed seven new teachers, three of whom are first-time educators.

Principal Rhonda Clomax stated that her students are really performing well. She was particularly proud of the high number of FARM students that have achieved success as shown by their test results. TPA pupils in several grades outperformed county and state scores in Partnership for Assessment of Readiness for College and Careers (PARCC) math and English.

TPA shares their building with

Trinity Assembly of God church.

A survey will be sent out very soon to parents and staff to ascertain their feelings about a possible move to a location in Temple Hills. Currently, there is a search for a new facility that would allow TPA to add grades 9 through 12.

Clomax said that she is optimistic about the future, in which a new and more spacious location would play an important part.

TPA recently received a one-year charter extension from the county board of education.

Future goals include raising student math scores, increasing parental involvement and deepening their Hyde Culture mandate, which emphasizes character development.

tutors, who are selected based on their test scores, arrive at 7 a.m., 30 minutes before their normal arrival time on Tuesdays and Wednesdays, to plan their lessons. "They're like little teachers," Frontanes said.

For an hour and 20 minutes after school, student tutors implement their lessons to the ESOL second graders, also known as tutees, who are struggling to read. "They can decode, but they're not able to comprehend," Frontanes said. Because they are seeing the program for a second time, the fourth and fifth grade tutors also improve their reading scores in the state PARCC exams, Frontanes shared. There are currently 14 student tutors and 12 tutees in the program, which has been running for over 15 years at the school.

Imagine Learning is a more recent addition to the school, implemented only two years ago. Students new to the country with limited English proficiency are selected to participate in the program, which is currently offered to 24 students from grades 1 through 5. Through reading and phonics, students are able to improve their communication skills and fluency.

Although Imagine Learning

ESOL teacher Maria Frontanes

students convenes only twice a week after school, students are able to access the program anytime during the day. To the extent that students may need additional support, "teachers are able to use it as a resource," Frontanes said. "Naturally, ESOL teachers see a lot of growth in the students who use Imagine Learning on a consistent basis," Frontanes added.

"There are great things always happening here," Frontanes said about the various programs offered by Springhill Lake Elementary. "The kids have a lot of opportunities to be in something, instead of just going home."

Greenbelt Middle Tries New Initiatives to Engage Students

by Nora Eckert

Buses arrive at Greenbelt Middle School.

New initiatives at Greenbelt Middle School are enabling students to learn math through dance, take biology for high school credit and improve their PSAT and PARCC scores.

Principal Dr. Daria Valentine explains that the arts integration program is one of the most exciting recent additions to Greenbelt Middle School. This instructional method, which incorporates the arts in all disciplines, engages students who she says "are interested in developing their education through an artistic lens." Valentine believes this will create a more well-rounded curriculum for students.

She describes one example of how math teachers have integrated the arts into a traditional lesson. Students are tasked with solving a math problem to figure out the next dance move in a sequence. Once they have completed all the problems correctly, they have a complete line dance routine.

The school also added a biology course that can be taken for high school credit. Valentine is especially excited for this new addition to the curriculum, as she was a biology major in her undergraduate career.

The Middle School also continues to focus on improving its students' PARCC and PSAT scores through adding extended learning opportunities for students who need to strengthen their math and learning skills. Valentine says the school did see an increase in student scores on these tests last year, and hopes to continue this upward trend to meet district benchmarks.

Valentine says these initiatives could not be as effective without the support of a great team. "The success you see here at Greenbelt Middle School has everything to do with the staff and the work they put in to make sure our students succeed or have what they need to succeed. I'm really proud to be a part of that team."

man's life. "We try to plant seeds into the boys about life challenges. We don't judge, and offer them opportunities to share about different aspects of growing up in the age that they are," explained mentor Sylvester Hodge. Hodge, a retired military officer, has been in the organization for three years and recognizes the opportunity for growth in young men who are in the organization. "We cover bullying, hygiene, family issues and any life challenges. Our circles are confidential and we can talk about anything," he said.

On November 11, a meeting of the Boys to Men of Greater Washington took place at Springhill Lake Recreation Center. Heron learned a lot at the meeting. "I learned that there are lot of people in the world that can show you different experiences in life," he said. Throughout the meeting young men between the ages of 14 and 17 talked about the different stages in their lives. Some were excelling in school, others thrived in sports. But one key point stood out for all of them: they had no father figure in their lives.

Mentor Alex Rounds, who has participated with the organization for seven years, saw the lack of male role models as a key point to cover. "I could see for some boys that it's not easy to open up. I was also saddened to see how many didn't have men in their lives that they could open up to or trust," Rounds said. He stressed that it was important that the senior mentors explain to the younger men that the experiences they are going through are common, and that it is easier to experience them with someone who has been there before.

By meeting's end, the mentors' goal was for everyone to have learned something from other participants. The mentors' hope is that each young man will be able to trust and open up about what is going on in their lives and that they will feel comfortable to reach out and pass on their teaching to younger men as well. "I think the more comfortable we get, the easier the questions will come out," said Rounds.

City Opens Exhibit of Posters From Federal Theatre Shows

by Adam Glass

More than 45 people heard Christopher Cherry, Greenbelt performing arts coordinator, describe the history of the Depression-era Federal Theatre Project and its significance to Greenbelt at a slide show and multimedia lecture Sunday afternoon at the Community Center.

The lecture was part of a dedication ceremony for a new permanent exhibit of poster art for Federal Theatre Project shows, including the four principal productions in each year of the project's four-year run from 1935 to 1939: Macbeth (with an all-black cast); Sinclair Lewis's play about a fascist takeover of America, It Can't Happen Here; One-Third of a Nation, about slum housing; and a satirical revue, Sing for Your Supper.

Posters for these shows and four others have been carefully hung in an alcove adjacent to Cherry's office in the Community Center to commemorate the project.

Greenbelt vocalist Aidan Larkin sang two songs from project shows: The TVA Song, accompanying himself on the guitar, and Leaning on a Shovel, accompanied by Stefan Brodd on the piano. The audience was also treated to a recording of Paul Robeson singing on CBS radio a 1930s paean to diversity, Ballad for Uncle Sam/Ballad for America, with its powerful lyric, "I'm everybody who's nobody."

The slide show was enlivened with photographs of Rexford Guy Tugwell, of the Resettlement Administration, in his trademark white suit visiting Greenbelt when it was under construction, and President Franklin Roosevelt admiring several of the bass with which Greenbelt Lake had been stocked. The president was an avid fisherman.

Other highlights included photos of Burt Lancaster as a young acrobat in the Federal Theatre Project doing a handstand on parallel bars and heiress Evalyn Walsh McLean wearing the Hope Diamond. McLean leased two mansions to the federal government during the Depression. One housed the headquarters of the Federal Theatre Project and the office where Greenbelt was planned was located in the other.

Cherry didn't whitewash the sharp-elbowed politics of the 1930s. The Roosevelt administration had planned to build Greenbelt-style planned communities across the nation, but the Supreme Court upheld a federal appeals court finding that the towns were unconstitutional, and only three were built, Cherry said. The all-black casting of Macbeth created career-launching opportunities for black actors, but the avowed racist, red-baiting chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, Martin Dies Jr., used it to create opposition to the project among his reactionary colleagues. Similarly, the revue Sing for Your Supper played to sold-out crowds in New York, but Dies and his allies put their focus on the fact that black and white actors danced with each other in the musical numbers. They didn't like that the project gave equal pay to blacks and whites, or what they saw as communist influence in the selection of plays. On June 30, 1939 they succeeded in terminating the funding of the project, over Roosevelt's vehement protests, Cherry said.

After the slide show, Mayor Emmett Jordan commented on the tremendous energy and rigor that Cherry brought to his lecture, and called it typical of Cherry's contributions to Greenbelt.

Speaking of Cherry's role in the multi-faceted 18-month Greenbelt Legacy 80th Anniversary celebration, which comes to a close in December, Councilmember Judith Davis said, "If he hadn't put in all the effort and done the research, most of these events wouldn't have happened." She hailed Cherry's ingenuity in taking a small, unremarkable space, unadorned for decades, and turning it into a museum-quality tribute to the Federal Theatre Project.

Melissa Mackey, a Greenbelt resident who attended the ceremony with her adult daughter, Adrienne Peters, said she was there out of respect for Cherry.

"He's just so loved and respected in the community," she said. Mackey praised Cherry for the talent he brought to the many youth musicals he has produced in his decades-long tenure. They were so professional, she said, because he treated the young actors as serious artists. Peters recalled her role as Penelope's maid in Homeward Bound, a youth musical adapted from Homer's Odyssey. "I had a solo!" Peters said.

Tim Murray, the youngest child of Theodora Murray, the founder in 1938 of the Greenbelt Players, Greenbelt's first theater company, cut the ribbon to open the exhibit after the lecture, with his older brother Terry Murray standing by. The crowd then adjourned for refreshments, including cakes decorated for the Greenbelt Players and the Federal Theatre Project.

City Council Discusses Security, Other Business

by Ian Round

Greenbelt City Council spent much of its less than two-hour November 13 meeting discussing a $500 grant to Mishkan Torah suggested by Councilmember Colin Byrd in the aftermath of the mass shooting last month at a synagogue in Pittsburgh. The motion failed for lack of a second.

Byrd said the recent increase in anti-semitic hate crimes necessitated the grant, and that it would symbolize council's support for the Jewish community.

"Anti-semitism is on a particular uptick," said Aileen Kroll, a member of Mishkan Torah who spoke in favor of the grant. "On Saturday, the last place I wanted to go was Mishkan Torah because I didn't feel safe."

"I am supportive of the idea but I think this is a little premature," said Councilmember Leta Mach. "I think we need to talk to all of our religious groups . . . and find out what they feel they need before we go ahead and jump forward with a solution."

Councilmember Silke Pope said she hoped for a more "comprehensive," citywide response to improve security. "$500 is not a lot of money for security upgrades," she said.

Councilmember Judith Davis noted followers of many religions have been affected by mass shootings. Councilmember Edward Putens said the separation of church and state could make the grant "messy."

Other Business

Council accepted reports from the Board of Elections and the Community Relations Advisory Board and will consider them at the next meeting on November 26.

Council also appointed or reappointed three people to advisory groups. Michael Lee was reappointed to the Park and Recreation Advisory Board, Warren Wilcox was appointed to the Senior Citizens Advisory Board and Efrat Levner was appointed to the Arts Advisory Board.

OA Welcomes New Members In 12-Step Path to Recovery

by Theresa Diffendal

Do you eat when you're not hungry, to the point of feeling sick? Do you spend too much time thinking about food, arguing with yourself about whether or what to eat? Are your eating behaviors affecting your health or the way you live your life?

No matter what your problem with food, you are not alone.

That is the primary message of Overeaters Anonymous (OA), a 12-step program for individuals who want to learn how to live without compulsive overeating or other compulsive food behaviors including under-eating, food addiction, anorexia, bulimia or over-exercising.

Individuals often come to OA thinking their issues with food stem from a lack of willpower, but OA members such as Dave, a regular meeting attendee who has battled both overeating and daily binge and purge cycles, would sooner compare compulsive eating to an addiction. He says: "In each case the addict cannot stop himself or herself from reaching for their substance of choice."

OA's Twelve Steps, modeled from those of Alcoholics Anonymous, are designed to dismantle the willpower narrative from the first step, which involves admitting one is "powerless over food."

With the National Association of Anorexia Nervosa and Associated Disorders reporting that overeating affects almost 3 percent of American adults in their lifetime, OA and its members consistently ask themselves, "how do we still reach the suffering overeater?"

In an effort to practice step 12 of the OA program, which calls members who have benefited from OA's program to spread the message to all who suffer from overeating, current OA members shared their experiences with food and compulsive overeating.

"It's like paying it forward, so to speak," said Thomas, a member of OA. For Thomas, his problems with food, particularly sugar, began practically "from birth." He continued, "this feeling of 'it's never enough:' it's sort of in-built."

There is no hierarchical structure in OA, so volunteers like Thomas take turns opening meetings and carrying out other duties to help others know OA exists. We met in a church basement before a weeknight meeting. The setting is simple, but it allows those who suffer from compulsive overeating to open up and receive support.

Though members would often mention their weights and the anxiety which stems from their body size, OA is not primarily about weight. "It is a disease," Thomas reiterated throughout the meeting. "It's not a moral problem or lack of willpower."

When members spoke, they would begin with their name and the statement, "I'm a compulsive eater," breaking the stigma around acknowledging the addiction.

"It's worth saying that I'm a compulsive overeater," said Larry, who turned to food as early as sixth grade as a way to deal with problems.

"I was killing myself with food," he said, before adding with a laugh, "I [was] cruising for a heart attack, you know?"

But with OA, he's been able to turn things around. He attributes the change to OA's Twelve Steps, which provide him with a clear set of actions to take. The breakthrough, he said, was not in stopping overeating, but in learning how to deal with "life when it comes."

To achieve this, some of the steps have members turning their lives over to a "higher power" or "Power greater than ourselves." But members are quick to assure the program is not strictly religious; atheists and agnostics are members and encouraged to join.

"[Your higher power] can be a doorknob," said Peggy, a retired 69-year-old woman who has struggled with food since the age of 4. What it really means, she continued, is "you never have to do anything alone anymore." She offered her OA group as an example of a possible higher power, one that she used for many years.

And many do find the group to be a source of strength. OA's regular meetings offer an accepting, strictly anonymous space where individuals share their personal journeys without interruptions.

"When people share about their food issues and what they eat over, I think it helps," said Peggy. By connecting with the many others for whom food is a problem, individuals learn that overeating is not a personal failure or shortcoming but an addiction.

"For a lot of people, it's really hard to walk into this first meeting," said Laura, a member of OA for 30 years. But she emphasized the community she found when she continued attending, saying "we have been in the trenches together ... I care about them deeply, I want them to recover."

OA opens its doors to anyone who is seeking a solution to food-related behaviors. Being a member of OA requires no dues or fees, simply a desire to stop eating compulsively. "We don't strive for perfection here," said Thomas. "We just strive for progress."

OA meets Mondays at 7:30 p.m. at 101 Greenhill Road in a space provided by Greenbelt Baptist Church. OA has no affiliation with this or any church or other organization. OA invites anyone interested in learning more about the Overeaters Anonymous program to their newcomer orientation on Monday, November 26, at 7 p.m.

The Greenbelt Connection: City-wide Affordable Mobility

by Jason Martin

There's a fancy new bus in town, the Greenbelt Connection, and it is owned by the City of Greenbelt, which has been providing affordable transportation to residents for 30 years. The Greenbelt Connection started in 1988 and continues to serve up to 140 residents a week. This service is exclusive to Greenbelt residents and allows them to travel to destinations within the city and to medical appointments within a five-mile radius of Greenbelt. The cost is an affordable $1 for seniors, citizens with disabilities and children 6 to 18 years old. It costs $2 for all other residents (each way). Children younger than 6 ride free.

Previous buses were leased from Prince George's County as part of the Call-A-Bus service in conjunction with the state-wide Transportation Assistance Program (TAP). In 2017, the leased bus became unavailable and since then the city has been borrowing a vehicle from the Town of Berwyn Heights. With no new buses or loaners available through the TAP program, the council approved the purchase of a new Greenbelt Connection vehicle in the FY 2019 budget. The sleek new 14-passenger, wheelchair-accessible van has been purchased and is now busy connecting people with the places they need to go.

Residents taking the Greenbelt Connection have the privilege of meeting one of the city's finest employees, Brian Allen. Allen has been with the Department of Public Works for 12 years and has been driving the Greenbelt Connection for the past three. Off bus duty, Allen is a pastor at Empower Place Fellowship in Capital Heights. When asked why he became a pastor, Allen said, "I love helping people more than anything else." He helps many seniors and citizens with disabilities get to the grocery store, doctor's office and everywhere in between. The city, public works and all the residents who use the Greenbelt Connection appreciate his commitment to serving others. Allen looks forward to helping people and loves driving the bus daily.

On Increasing Greenbelt's Cooperative Cross Section

by Cathie Meetre

So, how does a patronage dividend on a funeral sound as a possibility for future cooperative growth? Sound farfetched? Not at all. Residents of the UK not only have the option of cooperative grocery stores and banks but can manage the funeral arrangements of their dearly departed via Cooperative Funeralcare. Co-op funerals account for over 16 percent of all UK funerals and costs are presented openly up front (See box). The one percent patronage dividend on the funeral goes to local community organizations rather than to the purchaser – the British, as always, exhibiting their national commitment to refined good taste. The UK's Cooperative Funeralcare offers a Best Price Guarantee and will meet or beat the price of any competitor for the same funeral. Buying online also saves the equivalent of about $125 and financing is easily arranged at one of over 1,000 establishments across the country.

Although workers and consumers have cooperated since the dawn of communal living to overcome adversity and harness group capabilities, the arrangement was generally informal and not enshrined in a set of written principles. Characteristically, neighbors banded together to purchase or harvest and share their resources and were usually workers rather than owners or the ruling class – the well-off didn't need to share to survive.

In 1884 England, the Rochdale Equitable Pioneers met in the rapidly industrializing area of Lancashire to draft the principles on which cooperatives have since thrived. Although a few cooperatives founded prior to that still survive in the UK, these precursor stores also ultimately adopted the robust structure devised by the Rochdale group. The founding principles (which remain much the same today) were:

- Voluntary and open membership
- Democratic member control
- Member economic participation
- Autonomy and independence
- Education, training and information
- Cooperation among cooperatives

Concern for Community

Greenbelt may hold the record for the number of cooperatives per capita in a U.S. city. The concept took firm hold in the town, including the 1952 cooperative purchase of the original federal rental housing project built in 1937 – now Greenbelt Homes, Inc. Even today, the list of co-ops is impressive: the grocery store, the credit union (yes, Virginia, this credit union is a cooperative), this newspaper, the nursery school, the New Deal Café, MakerSpace and of course, the supersized doyen of them all – Greenbelt Homes, Inc.

The Rochdale pioneers were motivated by the rigors of the industrial revolution. Britain, like a precocious child, had its industrial revolution early. It pioneered the wretched conditions that have characterized industrial revolutions around the globe since – and which remain a classic symptom of industrial development in third-world countries.

Although many factory owners cared not a hoot for the welfare of their workers, some early cooperative experiments were pioneered by wealthy industrialists who recognized the benefit to productivity of having workers who weren't half-starved and ill. Robert Owen, a wealthy cotton manufacturer, floated a cooperative grocery store and encouraged his workers to acquire an education, grow their own food and become self-reliant and self-sustaining. Most co-ops, however, were started by workers themselves, despite the fact that obtaining capital, even when pooling resources, was an almost insuperable barrier to jump-starting a grocery store.

Each of the original 28 members of the Rochdale Pioneers contributed £1 sterling to capitalize their store and it took them four months to save the money. Even a skilled worker earned only about £1.50 (in 1844 terms) for a 10-hour-per-day, six-day work week. An unskilled laborer earned about £0.75 and for everybody, most of this was consumed by the expenses of their marginal standard of living. It's hard to imagine how people working a 60-hour-a-week, physically-demanding job found the time and energy to organize a business. But they persisted and once workers realized it was possible, the movement snowballed and hundreds of stores opened within a few years, especially in the industrialized areas north of London.

While the cooperative movement flourished in the 19th and earlier 20th centuries, it took a beating in the second half of the 20th. In 1990s England, one of the largest cooperative groups was the battleground for a takeover by a commercial enterprise which correctly realized that members would be attracted by a cash buyout that offered members their share of the proceeds. Membership had been decreasing, so while the patronage dividends were still small, the value of the business itself meant the value of a member's ownership was high. The takeover ultimately failed amidst rancor and criminal conspiracy prosecutions against the co-op's directors, but was the impetus for a reorganization and merging of cooperatives to form a stronger alliance for the future.

In the U.S., the cooperative movement came under fire in the early 1950s during the McCarthy era. The pioneers organizing the cooperative purchase of the federal project came under suspicion as communist sympathizers and were hounded for their vision.

But things have improved in both countries. Today in England, the blue and white co-op signs are everywhere (the logo design is similar to the U.S. version). Many convenience stores are little co-ops and most towns have larger grocery stores. As well as Funeralcare, there's a Cooperative Bank. Like Greenbelt's co-op grocery store, the UK's co-ops track purchases and offer dividends to their members. And in Greenbelt, both newer and long-established cooperatives continue to keep the needs of their memberships front and center. In the U.S., a cooperative is no longer deemed 'unAmerican'.

It is important, however, not to take the cooperative movement for granted. Successful co-ops need members to participate both as purchasers and in the administration and direction of the enterprise – but the results are a spectacular gain for all involved.

So, Greenbelt, who's up for organizing a new cooperative funeral vendor?

Cooperative Funeral Costs

What price a cooperative funeral? The options can be found clearly explained on the web (cooperativefuneralcare.co.uk). The simplest (known as Cremation Without Ceremony) starts at £1,395 (about $1,800) – there's no service and the cremation is private. The classic option is a Simple Funeral and there are bronze, silver and gold plans with specific grades of coffin (standard, wood-grained and veneered) and move-up options like personal choice of funeral route, number of limousines and unlimited access to "the chapel of rest." Add a £200 discount for members and it's a deal that's hard to beat.

Beltway Plaza Mall Honors Craig and Yolanda Muckle

A portrait of the Muckles is unveiled at the Beltway Plaza Wall of Fame.

Beltway Plaza inducted a high-profile Prince George's County couple into the mall's Wall of Fame on Friday, November 9 before an audience of more than 40 friends, well-wishers and guests.

Marc "Kap" Kapistan, general counsel of The Quantum Company and owner of the mall, presided over the ceremony inducting Craig Muckle and his wife Yolanda Muckle into the Wall of Fame.

The Wall of Fame, located in the hallway running from the parking lot of Beltway Plaza to TJ Maxx, houses 15 large-framed photos of past honorees, with plaques describing their accomplishments. The Wall commemorates local citizens who are distinguished for their public service or individual accomplishments. The mall has been presenting these awards for the past four years, Kapistan said. Past honorees include former Greenbelt mayor (and current councilmember) Judith Davis and retired Greenbelt chief of police James Craze.

Craig Muckle was feted for his charitable efforts on the Prince George's County Chamber of Commerce, for fundraising for the Special Olympics and for his work as a basketball coach and referee. His career in public relations began at ESPN, where he started as a driver, and later included work for the BET Network, Rite Aid, Safeway and the Archdiocese of Washington, Muckle said.

Accepting his award he said, "As a PR person I am used to making others look good." He was comfortable in front of a microphone because of his public relations background, he said, but then added, "I'm uncomfortable talking about myself."

Yolanda Muckle, a Baltimore native with a background in radio, television and public relations and currently a real estate broker, was praised for her ubiquitous marketing. Prince George's County Councilmember Todd Turner, a presenter at the ceremony, noted that Muckle's face was plastered on posters at bus stops. State Senator Douglas J.J. Peters, who also spoke, called her "an advertising machine, which you have to be in real estate." He recalled checking out his groceries at Safeway, "and there's Yolanda, on my divider!" She was praised for her work in historic preservation in Prince George's County, among other public service efforts.

speed of the SCMaglev technology to significantly reduce travel time in order to help meet the capacity and ridership needs of the Baltimore-Washington region.” The Alternatives Report’s purpose is to document the ongoing process of developing and refining alternatives and also evaluating the environmental impact of the two potential routes along the Baltimore-Washington Parkway. These two options are known as Alternative J, which would run along the west side of the parkway, and Alternative J-1, which would run along the east side. The report also considers if the two build alternatives are “reasonable and feasible for further evaluation in the Draft Environmental Impact Statement,” which is scheduled to be released early in 2019.

Each of the two routes would run parallel to the Baltimore-Washington Parkway. On the west side (Alternative J), the rail line would run along the edge of the Parkway and pass under portions of central Greenbelt and the Forest Preserve. On the east side of the parkway the route (Alternative J-1) would run under several communities including Greenbriar as well as under or on portions of federal land, including the parkway itself, the National Security Agency and Goddard. Even though, according to the Washington Post, Northeast Maglev officials say that the route along the east side of the Parkway is their preferred option, maglev planners have not yet reached a decision about the route.

According to the non-partisan group Citizens Against This SCMaglev (CATS), “there is growing concern that because of the public-private nature of this project, the potential billions of dollars of foreign investment available, and increased interest by both state and federal administrations – this train may be built in the near future without the independent deliberative evaluations and reviews that it deserves.” On its website, CATS advises those concerned to carefully read and then comment on the contents of the report. CATS also questions many of the alleged benefits of the maglev including that it will alleviate traffic congestion, provide jobs and bring economic growth and development.

According to the report, the Federal Railroad Administration (FRA) will continue to provide opportunities for agency comments on the alternatives to be considered during the environmental review process. The report also affirms that additional review and comment opportunities will be available during public circulation of the report.

According to the Baltimore Sun, Wayne Rogers, chairman and CEO of Baltimore Washington Rapid Rail, said that one clear point of the report is that “the project continues to proceed forward, incorporating at each step the comments of agencies and the public.”

Options for the maglev project will continue to be studied further as part of the federal environmental review process that is expected to be completed in early 2020. The FRA has said that it will select a preferred route and construction process next year. If the federal government gives its approval for the project, tunneling could begin as early as fall 2020 and the line could begin operations in 2027.

muscle spasms and anxiety disorders. An appointment with a physician is required and AltPharm can assist patients finding a doctor who participates in this system. A week is required for the MMCC to provide a patient number. Product costs vary with the type and quality of cannabis used, yet the most common amounts are measured in grams and cost $10 to $20.

Medical marijuana management is a three-tiered system. The first is the growing of it. Maryland licenses about 15 medical marijuana growers, since transport of the product across state lines is illegal. The next tier consists of processors who package and develop the crop into its many formulations including inhalable, capsules, lozenges and edible products. The last tier is distribution which is managed by the dispensaries. AltPharm contracts with MaryCann Direct (MCDirect) for deliveries of the product which will be used in Greenbelt. Home deliveries can often be made the day the product is requested and sometimes even within an hour. Weekly deliveries, however, are most common. Use of the Weedmap app can expedite the process. Riordon estimates that the state industry expects a $100 million profit by the end of 2018.

Medical marijuana can be used for a variety of conditions. Pain relief and mitigating the uncomfortable side effects of chemotherapy are the most common. Other uses are the treatment of PTSD, fibromyalgia, and also for both increasing and suppressing the appetite. Riordon and Heil added that cannabis can also help in meth recovery and opioid withdrawal by lessening its flu-like symptoms. Riordon said that general practitioners are the most common prescribers of medical cannabis along with dentists and, interestingly, podiatrists.

In an interview with Susan Harris of Greenbelt Online, Heil explained the relationship between the two central substances in marijuana, tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) and cannabidiol (CBD). THC provides the high while CBD is a non-psychoactive element that has been found to aid in the neurological treatment of epilepsy as well as possibly arthritis, anxiety and cancer. When asked if CBD could be effective solely on its own without the presence of THC, thus negating the need for a prescription, she replied by mentioning the entourage effect, which suggests that even a small amount of THC can make treatment more effective. Patients can choose to make use of products such as tablets, concentrates or creams, which have a 10 to 1 ratio of CBD to THC, thus providing only the relief they desire without THC’s psychoactive effects.

Before becoming director of communications at AltPharm, Riordon spent 15 years as a journalist for the American Physical Society. In addition to her role as company spokesman, Heil has spent the last five years as a science communicator for Maryland NanoCenter at the University of Maryland. She said that her past experience has been invaluable as she talks to the public about medical cannabis.

In Harris’s interview, Heil revealed that she herself is a medical cannabis user as well. She suffers from anxiety and idiopathic seizure disease. She is working with her physician to determine if long-term cannabis use will bring the relief she seeks and is waiting to see if research will bear out cannabis’s role in treating these disorders. Riordon said that he does not have a condition that warrants treatment with cannabis.

When asked about the possibility of recreational marijuana becoming legalized in Maryland, Heil said she felt it was likely, perhaps in the next 10 years. It would provide tax revenues and would be safely and efficiently regulated. She asserted that there will always be a medical market because it can truly provide relief.

Items were taken from two vehicles after windows were broken out. Taken from the 7600 block Mandan Road were a hydraulic jack, lug nut wrench and tire inflator, and in the 6100 block Breezewood Court a cell phone and money were taken.

Two incidents of vandalism were reported. A front passenger window was broken out in the 7500 block Mandan Road. In the second case, a man walking to his vehicle in the 9100 block Edmonston Court noticed a person kneeling next to it. This person ran away and the car owner noticed one of his tires was slashed.

The Department is offering a reward of up to $1,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of a suspect in any of the unsolved crimes reported in the blotter.

Legion Golf Tourney Raises Funds to Support Post's Community Activities

by Butch Hicks

Greenbelt American Legion Post 136 plans for 2019 include activities to continue veteran and community support programs and also raise funds to ensure continued Post operation. "It was clear that without certain infrastructure repairs the Post could not provide veteran support functions and community support activities," said Assistant Post Manager Brian Crabill. "How would Legion, Sons of the American Legion and Auxiliary members continue contributing to Maryland Center for Veterans Education and Training, the Charlotte Hall Veterans Home, local community schools support and contributions to nursing scholarships, among other Post support programs?"

After considering several options, Crabill developed a golf tournament to be held annually as a fundraiser for Post support. The tournament was held on a 72 degree, sunny, October 12. It was a full-blown success, as 84 men and women golfers from Greenbelt and as far away as Frederick, Md., and Georgetown, Del., teed off at Bowie Golf and

Country Club. Crabill said the tournament's fun quota was high with plenty of food and drink on the course and golfing challenges in putting, longest drives, closest to the pin and team results. "The awards ceremony at the Post was a full house as we presented prizes to winning foursomes and individuals."

Crabill offered special thanks to the many sponsors that helped make the tournament a success, including supplying gift bags and door prizes so everyone could feel like a winner. "The volunteers on the course and at the Post were tireless, starting in early morning and helping until late afternoon," he said. Ken Hall, who drove from Prince Frederick to play, said for a first tournament the event was well planned. "The organization of the tournament including start time, movement around the course, signage about hole events and score card processing was perfect. I particularly liked the 19th-hole awards program held at the Legion. I'm in for next year."
