Co-op Launches First Online Ordering, Curbside Pickup

by Jill Stevenson

The Greenbelt Co-op Supermarket and Pharmacy now offers online grocery ordering through Mercato, the online grocery e-commerce platform for independently owned grocery and specialty food stores.

During the pandemic, this service has been requested by Co-op members and other customers who want to shop with the Co-op while avoiding coming into the store. The pilot program aims to fulfill this need. Co-op is planning to offer home delivery soon.

“We’re excited and delighted to offer this new program,” says Co-op General Manager Dan Gillotte. “But the same supply challenges that exist in-store will exist online, so if it is not available in the store, it will not magically be available online.” Shoppers who use the Co-op’s online Mercato store can indicate with their order that Co-op staff may substitute the next best item on hand, if necessary.

“Anyone can order any time, any day for pickup on the following day,” says Gillotte. “Thanks to everyone for your patience as we’ve got most of the bugs worked out of this new offering.” To start, the Co-op is charging a 5 percent service fee and has a $30 minimum per order, with a limited number of pick-up slots available daily, so those who need a certain time should order as early as possible the day before to ensure a slot. When shoppers arrive at their pickup time, they should pull up along the green barriers toward the front of the store and call the store at 301-474-0522. It is advised to pop the trunk or open a door and staff will bring out the order in a contactless way. At the moment, Co-op is set to handle five pickup customers per hour during this early phase, with orders ready as the hour begins. Gillotte noted, “We are open to expanding the program’s capacity based on our experiences with it and the demand we experience.”

June 2nd Maryland Primary A “Stay at Home” Election

by Kathleen Gallagher

Once upon a time, not long ago, the State of Maryland was scheduled to hold both its Democratic and Republican primary elections on Tuesday, April 28, as part of the process of determining who would be nominated by their respective parties to run in the presidential election on November 3. That was before the impact of the coronavirus was fully appreciated. Joining 15 other states and Puerto Rico, Governor Larry Hogan decided that discretion was the better part of valor and issued a proclamation resetting Maryland’s primary election day to Tuesday, June 2. The deadline for registering to vote prior to the primary elections was also extended to May 27.

Not only has the question of who the party nominees will be pretty well sorted itself out, but Maryland voters will have an election unlike any they have known before. At Hogan’s order the State Board of Elections submitted a plan for safely running the primary elections. The governor approved the board’s plan on April 10. What follows below is the outline for the plan, but some details are still being worked out.

The primary election will be conducted almost entirely by mail.

2021 Budget

General Government Budget Presents More Challenges

by Diane Oberg

The General Government budget covers the costs of the city council, city manager’s office, the museum director and the staff responsible for finance, human resources, information technology, economic development and public information. City Manager Nicole Ard’s proposed budget funded this account at $3.9 million, roughly 11.8 percent of the total general fund budget. The Greenbelt City Council reviewed this budget at its April 16 worksession. However, these numbers no longer reflect current conditions.

To no one’s surprise the impact of the pandemic topped Ard’s list of issues. Top priority is to protect the community’s health and safety, she wrote. Therefore, essential services, such as police and public works will continue while other services may be curtailed or delivered differently.

GAIL and CARES Services Continue During COVID-19

by Callan Clark Tansill-Suddath

Este artículo está disponible en español en nuestra página web www.greenbeltnewsreview.com.

Amid a disaster, the most vulnerable members of a community are at increased risk of falling through the cracks. In Greenbelt, two city programs, designed to look out for members of the community more likely to struggle, are providing services during the COVID-19 pandemic.

GAIL (Greenbelt Assistance in Living) assists senior citizens and underemployed members of the community. It has restructured its services to cater to the unique needs of clients at this time. Christal Batey, a community resource advocate, reports seeing an increased need for services as the global economy becomes more unstable. “In 2008, when the economy dropped significantly, we expanded our reach to the unemployed and underemployed,” she noted. As a result of economic turmoil caused by COVID-19, Batey says “the number of people seeking assistance has grown immensely.”

A number of GAIL programs have been altered to accommodate new restrictions. One pressing issue is the ability to keep seniors in the community connected to loved ones while they are self-quarantining. Technology opens many doors for communication,

Letters to the Editor

Kudos to Bob Davis

Thank you, thank you, thank you to Co-op General Manager Bob Davis for his wonderful contribution to the entire Greenbelt community in shepherding our town's main food and pharmacy source through the thick and thin times since the Greenbelt Consumer Cooperative took over from Greenbelt Consumer Services in 1984. On the occasion of his well-earned retirement, as he hands off the management during these troubling times, he can look back with pride on his years of service, knowing he has given a career to this community and to the maintenance of this community resource.

From the very beginning, the board of the Co-op was fortunate to have found him with his command of cooperative principles, his managerial experience with cooperative grocery stores, his dedication to the well-being of the business and his round-the-clock commitment to service.

He helped steer the Co-op safely through the hard start-up times, recruiting assistant manager Dave Brinks as part of the managerial team. The increasing strength he fostered enabled the store to carry the financial burden of supporting the Co-op's failing service station division on Southway before it was eventually sold. He kept store and pharmacy operations going through sudden failures in suppliers and sudden failures in power – all the while working patiently to keep the board and the Co-op members informed of the community services, thin margins and the need to keep up member patronage in the face of the competition from nearby chain stores.

It is fitting that, as the entire nation has come to appreciate the people who bring us our groceries, we give our thanks to Bob Davis who, even as he was preparing to hand over the reins, put in place the processes and safety measures that have enabled us to continue getting our food and medications.

Thank you, Bob Davis. All the best in your retirement.

Respect for Chickens

May 4 is International Respect for Chickens Day. This annual project was launched by United Poultry Concerns in 2005 to celebrate chickens and bring awareness of the pain and suffering they experience in farming operations. Karen Davis, president of United Poultry Concerns, has written several well-researched books describing the hardships that chickens endure and how we can make a difference in their lives and improve our own health by adopting a plant-based diet. If you would like to learn more about her work, please visit her website at upc-online.org where you will find a variety of information on this important subject.

Police Activity

Since the evening of April 14, the community had very little, if any, update on the activity of that evening involving a hunt for a fugitive in Greenbelt. Multiple police organizations were involved but the city and our neighborhood never received an all clear or an update after we were told to stay inside with doors locked. That evening police walked through our neighbors' front and back yards with flashlights.

Even if this were not a City of Greenbelt Police Department operation, would it not be best for our police to comment if no other department would? I think this is an opportunity for our police to build an even tighter bond with the community. I inquired about this a week or so ago via our police department's website but did not hear back, though a delayed response could be expected with the current situation.

Thanks as always for serving our city so well!

Our Immune Systems

Given that we are now greatly concerned about a particular virus . . . and given that our immune systems are our strongest protection . . . why not actually boost our immune systems?

There is a great set of instructions at everydayhealth.com, and they do a good job of explaining their "7 Ways to Keep Your Immune System Healthy."

- 1) Eat a healthful diet.
- 2) Keep stress under control.
- 3) Get plenty of good quality sleep.
- 4) Exercise regularly.
- 5) With alcohol, practice moderation.
- 6) Don't smoke cigarettes.
- 7) Keep symptoms of chronic conditions under control.

Correction

In our April 23 article about this year's virtual Crop Walk, we incorrectly reported the percentage of the federal budget that goes to humanitarian purposes. That percentage is 0.07, that is, seven one-hundredths of one percent, in the United States and overseas. One of the recipients of contributions will be Help by Phone of Prince George's County.

Council Votes to Require Wearing Face Masks at Park

In response to numerous complaints and in the interest of public health, the Greenbelt City Council voted on Monday, April 27, to require face coverings while using Buddy Attick Park including the entire trail and park area. Signs will be posted at the park and violators will be subject to warnings and possible fines. Those with health issues that prohibit them from using masks and under the age of 2 will be excused. Please abide by this new rule as it is for both your safety and the safety of everyone that uses the park. Also, see the signs now posted in Greenbelt parks concerning social distancing. We appreciate everyone's cooperation as we continue to do our best to keep Greenbelt residents safe during this pandemic.

OGT's Next Film Discussion Is May 3

The Old Greenbelt Theatre hosts film discussions via Zoom every Sunday at 2 p.m. This week, the "Flick of the Week" is Vertigo, the Alfred Hitchcock classic masterwork (1958, 130 minutes, rated PG). For anyone wishing to view the film ahead of the discussion, it is available for streaming on Amazon Prime, Apple TV, Google Play and YouTube (rental cost $3.99). This film was selected by OGT volunteers Tammy Hurley and Stacia Woycheck, who will lead the film discussion on Sunday, May 3 at 2 p.m.

About the Film: Vertigo

An ex-police officer who suffers from an intense fear of heights is hired to prevent an old friend's wife from committing suicide, but all is not as it seems. Hitchcock's haunting, compelling masterpiece is uniquely revelatory about the director's own predilections and hang-ups and is widely considered to be one of his masterworks.

Social Security Will Be Paid On Time. Beware of Scams.

Andrew Saul, commissioner of the Social Security Administration, said that Social Security and Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefit payments will continue to be paid on time during the COVID-19 pandemic. The agency also reminds everyone to be aware of scammers who try to take advantage of the pandemic to trick people into providing personal information or payment via retail gift cards, wire transfers, internet currency, or by mailing cash to maintain Social Security benefit payments or receive economic impact payments from the Department of the Treasury.

"Social Security will pay monthly benefits on time and these payments will not be affected by the COVID-19 pandemic," Saul said. "I want our beneficiaries to be aware that scammers may try to trick you into thinking the pandemic is stopping or somehow changing your Social Security payments, but that is not true. Don't be fooled."

The Department of the Treasury will soon provide information about economic impact payments under the recently enacted law, the Coronavirus Aid, Relief and Economic Security (CARES) Act. Treasury, not Social Security, will be making direct payments to eligible people. Social Security offices do not have information about these payments.

The Social Security Administration requests that the public use its online self-service options whenever possible. Local offices are closed but services are available by phone.

To allow available agents to provide better phone coverage, the agency has temporarily changed hours of operation for the national 800 number. New hours are 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. local time. Expect longer than normal wait times. The agency requests that 800 number callers remain patient, use its online services at socialsecurity.gov or call their local office. The national number is 1-800-772-1213 (TTY 1-800-325-0778).

Visit the agency's COVID-19 webpage at socialsecurity.gov/coronavirus/ for important information and updates.

Material for this article was drawn from a press release received from the Social Security Administration.

Dependent Children

According to a recent Social Security information bulletin, Supplemental Security Income (SSI) recipients who have dependent children and did not file 2018 or 2019 taxes need to act by Tuesday, May 5, in order to receive additional $500 payments for their eligible children quickly.

Find information at irs.gov/coronavirus/non-filers-enter-payment-info-here.

De acuerdo con un reciente boletín informativo de la Seguridad Social, los beneficiarios del Ingreso de Seguridad Suplementario (SSI) que tienen hijos dependientes y no presentaron los impuestos de 2018 o 2019 deben actuar antes del martes 5 de mayo para recibir pagos adicionales de $500 para sus hijos elegibles rápidamente.

2021 Budget

Worksession Examines GAIL, CARES and Admin Budgets

by Matt Arbach

The ramifications of COVID-19 on the Fiscal Year 2021 budgets of the Greenbelt Museum, Greenbelt CARES and Greenbelt Assistance In Living (GAIL) were the main topics at the Greenbelt City Council budget worksession on April 20. The uncertainties and challenges posed by the pandemic made budget decisions more difficult for council this time around.

The meeting began with council consensus on some form of notification to the city's apartment complexes, condominiums and homeowner associations on proper sanitation and hygiene in accord with state, county and federal guidelines, especially in common areas. Whether this would come from council or staff, such as the Planning Department or Code Enforcement, is to be determined.

Mayor Colin Byrd was keen on getting coronavirus testing sites to the Greenbelt area, perhaps with help from Governor Larry Hogan. He suggested having them in the vicinity of Metro stations to better accommodate residents without cars.

Museum

Greenbelt Museum Director Megan Searing Young presented her budget report to council, which included the most recent exhibits, programs, tours and collection/archives status, as well as their budget proposals, fundraising and update on the 10-A Crescent Education and Visitor Center.

The discussion focused on the aim of the Friends of the Greenbelt Museum (FOGM) for a greater clarification of the roles played by FOGM and the city. According to the FOGM report to council, "the current MOU has significantly blurred lines of responsibility. There is not a systematic assignment of responsibilities and tasks." FOGM would like to concentrate on fundraising, and delegate all "day-to-day tasks of running the museum" to the city. Currently, the city employs the museum director, with FOGM proposing that, in addition, the role of volunteer and education coordinator (a FOGM employee) be transferred to the city in a part-time capacity. This position would be "partially funded by a National Endowment for the Humanities grant awarded to FOGM in FY 2007," according to the city budget report.

Councilmember Judith Davis was concerned about hiring new employees in this economic crisis, stressing that in more normal circumstances "council would probably entertain this." Assistant City Manager David Moran replied that this part-time position would be a relatively budget neutral proposal, with the salary provided by the NEH grant and funds brought in from the gift shop, donations and tours. The meeting ended with a move to have a future meeting with FOGM to clarify all the budgetary details.

FOGM Board Member Jennifer Ruffner, in regard to the interior redesign project for 10-A Crescent, said that they "had a long way to go," with $200,000 of the anticipated $500,000 raised. She speculated on "a more phased process," and that FOGM will likely raise funds "as we go."

Dr. Liz Park, director of Greenbelt CARES and GAIL, said that services have been up-ended under the pandemic. Yet, she said, "we have maintained our caseloads," even adding more, as they have adapted to new approaches like teletherapy.

Christal Batey, community resource advocate for GAIL, said that a huge challenge has been providing services to clients, mostly seniors, without online connections, stressing that phone calls and mailing has compensated, saying that "we are learning to reinvent ourselves." Batey said that most calls being received concern utilities and information on evictions, which have been deferred during this crisis. Group-style programs like the free produce distribution have been suspended due to the need for social distancing. Council was keen on developing new strategies to provide these food essentials.

Batey said that Green Ridge House, the senior-living complex, is now fully leased and virus-free at the moment.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts reminded the meeting that the search for a new space for CARES should not be forgotten, even in this health priority. Park answered that "we have not stopped looking at other spaces." She also noted that she wasn't sure if there was money in the budget for any of it.

Councilmember Edward Putens was concerned about residents, seniors in particular, having access to essentials, especially hygiene products, and suggested seeking out a supplier that could work with the city.

Byrd concluded the meeting with news that masks are now available for purchase at the Co-op Supermarket.

Ard was concerned about the need to balance the extent of government services desired by the community against the ability to afford these services.

Other factors beside the impact of the virus were already challenging the city. The increase in the statewide minimum wage to its current level means that the recreation department's summer camps and other "self-sustaining programs" no longer pay for themselves. Minimum wage is currently scheduled to increase annually, reaching $15 per hour in 2025. This will force the city to either raise enrollment fees or subsidize these programs with tax revenue.

Ard pointed out that there is ongoing pressure to add services, staff and programs while holding the line on tax rates and fees. However, she noted that there is a reluctance to reduce services and programs.

Another challenge is managing and funding capital projects. Ard noted that the city's facilities and infrastructure are aging, with some facilities, such as parts of the Community Center and elements of the outdoor pool, being over 80 years old. Even relatively new buildings such as the Aquatics & Fitness Center and the Police Station are now more than 30 years old. The city's past practice of funding renovations through allocations to capital projects and reserve fund has not been enough to address these needs. In the future, she stated, the city should consider bond financing or other borrowing mechanisms to pay for renovations.

Management Objectives

Council appeared supportive of the proposal to require all employees to receive their pay electronically, a requirement already observed by many neighboring municipalities.

At least one councilmember opposed deferring the human resources objective to contract for a salary and compensation study.

City Treasurer Laura Allen told council that she plans to pull the plug on the efforts to implement an electronic timesheet system. Despite years of effort, the system is not yet operational. This initiative may be revisited in the future as part of the work to upgrade the city's financial system.

Allen also noted that she expects the city's costs for unemployment insurance will increase. In response to a comment at the April 14 council meeting, she reviewed the impact of the coronavirus on the amount and timing of city revenues and advised council that she is "unable to recommend the city commit more resources at this time."

As part of her austerity actions, Ard is proposing cancelling payment for all nonessential travel and training, including councilmembers' participation in conferences. She did recommend continuing advocacy efforts, including economic development.

“Feed Greenbelt” Initiative Helps Feed Locals in Need

Michael and Leah Moon of DC Vegan (DC-Vegan.com) and Pastor Jeff Warner from MCF Community Church (MCFcc.org) share a passion for helping Greenbelt’s residents. It is especially important during this unprecedented worldwide pandemic to look out for the welfare of the community. The most vulnerable among us are having a harder time than ever before, so the Moons and Warner partnered to create Feed Greenbelt to provide free meals to local food-insecure residents. DC Vegan already provides free meals at cost to health care workers.

MCF is spearheading this new service. Those in need can apply through MCF’s website (MCFcc.org/FeedGreenbelt) to be recipients of delicious, wholesome and nutritionally balanced meals that are made from quality ingredients and without added chemicals. Individuals who wish to contribute can make tax deductible donations to MCF, which uses 100 percent of the donations toward providing meals. Visit the MCF website to make a donation. Each $10 donation provides one reheatable meal to a Greenbelt resident in need.

Meals are offered on Wednesdays and Saturdays from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. via contactless pickup at the New Deal Café front patio. Free contactless delivery is available if needed.

Co-op is more frequently sanitizing carts, conveyor belts and keypads at checkout registers and the ATM, using a powerful commercial disinfectant approved for COVID-19. The popular produce and dairy aisles are one way.

Co-op requests one shopper per family and recommends planning a list based on store location to avoid backtracking. Managers monitor the number of shoppers in the store and during busy times institute a “one in, one out” policy at the entrance. Sanitizing wipes are available at the inside basket pickup and customers should remain six feet apart from other shoppers whenever possible. Shoppers should discard single-use face masks in trash cans with a secure lid.

Co-op’s suppliers have kept up with demand for popular perishables including produce, dairy, eggs and milk. However, quantity limits apply to goods in short supply which have included baking flour, paper goods and cleaning products.

Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings from 7 to 9 a.m. are reserved for vulnerable and immune-compromised patrons and these have become the store’s busiest times. The number of shoppers at other times of day has proven difficult to predict, but late morning and mid-afternoon have often been the quietest.

Evolving guidance from health and government officials is a challenge for staff and customers. Gillotte reports staff fear catching coronavirus or making family or

On Wednesday, April 29, the News Review’s secret shopper picked up her order at the Co-op using their Mercato system. Within 5 minutes of arrival, groceries were in the car. Everything was packed, cold things cold, and a minor substitution was made due to quantity. Ordering took some orientation, but will improve as the system ‘learns’ individual preferences and the catalog is tuned to group foods better.

Roosevelt Club Encourages Residents to Safely Participate

by Konrad Herling and Lyn Doyle

The Eleanor & Franklin Roosevelt Democratic Club’s meetings to celebrate the 100th anniversary of Women’s Right to Vote in March and the 50th Anniversary of Earth Day in April were postponed due to the coronavirus. The club’s board is now considering how to reach out during the shutdown to its members and Greenbelt area residents. The upcoming primary on June 2 and the presidential election in November increase the importance of this activity.

Residents voting in the June 2 primary will be voting by mail. Voting by mail has worked successfully in five states and allows voters to stay home and be safe. For more information about the primary or to join the Club, go to rooseveltclub.com or contact Konrad Herling at 301-345-9369.

Club members and the community as a whole are urged to support the annual CROP walk this Sunday, May 3, to raise awareness about and funds to assist those suffering from hunger. Fewer than usual will be walking but all can contribute to the cause and write to the local members of the U.S. House and Senate to express their concern that only 0.07 percent of the national budget is dedicated to addressing this issue. Contact Lyn or Bob Doyle of CROP’s Executive Committee at 301-328-7598 for more information.

Finally, the Club urges everyone in the community to submit their census surveys as the total number has a direct impact on the funding that Greenbelt receives from the federal government.

Greenbelters Find New Ways To Celebrate Earth Day 2020

by Rayonna Burton-Jernigan

This year, the commemoration of Earth Day was special because it was the 50th anniversary of the first celebration in 1970. And despite the stay-at-home order, many Greenbelters got out to celebrate the day.

Hally Ahearn spent her Earth Day reconnecting with nature as the sun shone. "I worked through my garden all day. It was one of the few days without rain and it was just gorgeous," said Ahearn.

The Sunday following Earth Day, Marjorie Donn, who is a part of the green team at her church, helped put on a church service that was dedicated to the current state of the earth.

Her role consisted of reading the book The Secret to Saying Thanks to children as someone else showed pictures.

Lore Rosenthal, program coordinator for the Greenbelt Climate Action Network, a project of the Chesapeake Education, Arts and Research Society or CHEARS, made the most of her Earth Day/Week by facilitating the Reel and Meal on April 20, participating in national planning phone calls for Earth Day Live, mentoring students in creating presentations about climate change and doing online action with the money pipeline.

She gave insight into why Earth Day is different this year, especially with younger people getting more involved in the climate change movement.

"It was different, because this year, the focus was on the climate crisis rather than on planting trees or doing stream cleanup. People are realizing that we haven't done enough. As those of my generation have not yet solved the climate crisis, now the younger generation, the students and young people are left to handle this crisis," said Rosenthal.

"The climate crisis is a serious problem. And we need to fight for those who are most impacted now," she continued. "Rather than taking to the street, we had to take to the internet highway."

Before the stay-at-home order, many plans were in motion to ensure that this Earth Day would be packed with activities to produce a change in the climate crisis. Even with big plans being canceled, that is not stopping what is happening on a local level.

Tom Taylor won't let canceled plans stop his path to a greener community. Taylor celebrated the day by giving a presentation on trying to get a community composting facility. "I think we're being very earthy this week, because we're dealing with compost and improving the soil," he said.

The message behind Earth Day is one of supporting environmental protection.

"I see it as a day to honor the Earth and to inspire us as individuals and as groups to stay involved and stay the course so that we continue to do the things that we need to do to make the earth better and preserve it," said Taylor.

Garden Boosters: Teaching Owners to Tame Hedges

by Susan Harris

Greenbelt's historic hedges along internal sidewalks, originally just 18" tall, were a popular feature in formal gardens of that era. Since then, hedges have fallen out of favor and in Old Greenbelt we see one reason why – many have grown too big for their location and become a maintenance burden for owners (Greenbelt Homes Inc. members), as well as obstacles to sidewalk pedestrians. Unfortunately, pruning to reduce the size of overgrown hedges is a skill that's possessed by very few – even among experienced gardeners.

So, teaching Greenbelters how to fix their hedge problems is the first official project of the newly formed Old Greenbelt Gardening Boosters, of which I'm a member. Instead of a garden club per se, it's an informal group of avid gardeners with the sole mission of helping neighbors learn to garden. Instead of organizing with dues, officers and monthly meetings, the group simply met over the winter to brainstorm ways to help Greenbelt gardeners. The Boosters include one or more Master Gardeners, professional horticulturists, garden club officers and self-taught gardeners with 50 or more years of experience.

To teach Greenbelters to solve their hedge problems, the Boosters decided to enlist help from a shrub-pruning expert at Yankee Clippers, the local shrub-pruning company founded in New York in 1991 and relocated to the D.C. area in 1996. They sent Shanti de Jongh to Old Greenbelt to teach some hedge-bound GHI members how to fix their hedges while Melissa Mackey, a GHI member and president of the Beltsville Garden Club, and I watched and learned.

During her visit to Greenbelt, de Jongh recommended pruning techniques for the most popular hedge types in Old Greenbelt – euonymus and privet – but the pruning techniques work for most shrubs. Videos, photos and tips from our training session with her are captured at GreenbeltOnline.org/pruning, on the nonprofit community website that sponsored the training session.

Now, with everyone staying home, is an opportune time to tackle big gardening projects like pruning hedges. Be outdoors, be productive, be safe and get a great workout.

As soon as it's safe for people to gather again, the Gardening Boosters have more projects in store for Greenbelt gardeners and gardeners-to-be. They include a 2020 Old Greenbelt Garden Tour and free garden consultations.

Mask Maker Extraordinaire Sylvia Hester Beats 750 Mark

by Cathie Meetre

When it comes to making masks to help protect our community against COVID-19, Sylvia Hester is among the most prolific makers of masks. With over 750 masks made in the last three weeks, she has provided 100 to medical staff, 60 to the Greenbelt Police Department, and the remainder have become the staple of the community mask effort run via Facebook and GreenbeltMasks@gmail.com with the help of the City of Greenbelt Police Department.

Hester moved here in 1999, finding the community and her home very accessible and convenient and the yard perfect for her dogs. Her roots in Greenbelt, however, go deeper. Growing up in Berwyn Heights, she learned to sew at the Greenbelt Middle School in home economics and inherited a family sewing tradition that included her great-grandmother, who was a quilter. Hester treasures her great-grandmother's final handsewn quilt, made in 1968, noting that it "is very precious to me." At home, there was an old Singer treadle machine that had been converted to electricity. All the ingredients were there.

After a 26-year career at Med-Star Washington Hospital Center where she worked in several departments, her last assignment was in the Department of Anesthesiology. Musing on the pandemic she says, "I do worry about the doctors I worked with and hope they are still healthy, as they work in the ICU."

Over time, Hester made costumes for her daughters as they grew up but, following in her great-grandmother's footsteps, she eventually specialized in quilts and wall hangings. When the COVID-19 crisis came along, she was prepared with the skills to make masks and a big pile of just the right type of cotton fabric left over from many quilting projects. With additional materials donated by the community over the last few weeks, her 750 or so masks used approximately 90 yards of fabric in 8 by 18" panels and incorporated ties cut from nearly 75 T-shirts. She completely wore out one pair of scissors and had to replace them.

Each mask takes Hester about 15 minutes to make once the pieces are cut. She's had a lot of help from her friend, Greenbelter Sharon Miller, whom she credits with boosting mask-making productivity with pre-cut fabrics and ties. When asked which are the best and worst parts of making masks Hester says, "Best is when they are done. Worst is the prepping of fabric."

Hester says that she doesn't know anybody personally who has contracted the virus, but she has still put all her energy and knowledge into helping her friends and neighbors stay healthy. The masks offer only a degree of protection, but somewhere in all those masks Hester has so generously given Greenbelters, are people who owe their health today to her efforts and some very frustrated viruses who were denied entry. She remarked that working on the masks has helped her worry less about the pandemic by keeping her busy and making her feel she can do something positive to help.

Hester's masks are available Friday and Monday and Wednesday, May 1, 4 and 6 from <https://www.eventbrite.com/e/mask-pickup-donation-requested-tickets-102094768200>. Quantities are limited and a donation is requested but not required. Materials donors and sewing volunteers can find information on facebook.com/groups/231369768006318/ or email greenbeltmasks@gmail.com.

Sing from your car or bike as you pass by. Drop a card or a flower off anytime. He'll be celebrating all week :)

Pandemic Experiences

Time: Where Has It Gone?

I am no longer keeping track of time as I used to. I get up when I wake up. Eat when hungry. Go outdoors walking or gardening when the sun is out, and nap for as long as I want when tired. I often read until I fall asleep – day or night.

Without a schedule to follow for sleeping and waking, routine classes, library books in need of returning, or doing hours of on-site volunteering, my time is now limitless.

I frequently lose track of what day it is, and need to check the calendar for the exact date when writing a check. Will I remember how to set my alarm clock in the future? How will routines be changed? Will I once again be disciplined enough to arrive somewhere on time? Will this lack of a need to hurry make me more patient as I await an appointment/assistance?

When will time return?

but using it does not come so naturally to people without prior experience.

Batey says that one of the challenges, with social isolation and even before COVID-19, is that [some seniors] don't have cable and don't have internet access. She continued, "When those services are not available, all of a sudden you just have your telephone. There are so many things that people could be participating in and enjoying visually [on the internet] like seeing family. We've seen that as a challenge as we move to things like telemedicine, doing therapy and care via Zoom and that sort of thing. In many instances, you are missing a beat if you're not connected."

In response, GAIL is looking for ways for people without internet access to get Wi-Fi at a low cost in their homes. The hope is that isolated seniors will be able to find entertainment – be it an audio book or a Facetime call with relatives – to help weather COVID-19.

Technology also plays a big role in the work CARES is doing. In fact, it is perhaps the only reason the service can keep functioning. CARES provides residents with therapy, mental health resources, crisis counseling and educational assistance. Liz Park, the director of Greenbelt CARES, says social distancing has predictably limited the staff's ability to meet with clients face-to-face, but has not brought these services to a halt.

Park says CARES has been able to "continue with all of [their] clinical clients who are able and want to continue using teletherapy services." She says facilitating therapy sessions through Zoom has gone well so far, but notes engaging children virtually can be quite a challenge. "We're getting creative in how we do some of the work we would do normally with kids. We use games and such."

CARES plans to accept new therapy clients shortly. Cognizant that more people may begin seeking mental health care for the first time amid the pandemic, Park says the organization is looking for creative ways to give more people access to their services, like starting group counseling sessions on Zoom.

With things so uncertain, being prepared for what is happening right now and what is to come remains vital for the people of Greenbelt. GAIL and CARES are doing their parts to assist with the process.

All registered, eligible voters will be mailed a ballot for this election, which should arrive from early to mid-May. There is no need to request a ballot. It will be mailed to the address the Board of Elections has on file. If the voter wishes to have it mailed elsewhere, the standard absentee ballot request form, available on the Board of Elections website (elections.maryland.gov) can be used for this purpose. All mailed ballots will include a return envelope and prepaid postage. Voters who prefer to drop off their mail ballots, rather than returning them by mail, may do so at designated ballot drop-off locations from Thursday, May 21, through Tuesday, June 2. A list of drop-off locations will be available soon.

In-person voting will be available on Election Day, June 2, for those who cannot vote by mail. No fewer than one and no more than four voting centers per county will be designated for this purpose. A list of voting centers will be available soon. Generally, the centers will be the sites of previously designated early voting locations.

To reduce the risk of spreading the novel coronavirus, the State Board of Elections strongly recommends that voters who can vote by mail do so. Voted ballots must be postmarked on or before Tuesday, June 2.

The location of drop-off spots and voting centers will be printed in this paper when they are identified.

Old Greenbelt Theatre Offers Virtual Movie Experiences

by Brogan Gerhart

“Another week, another marquee,” a post from Old Greenbelt Theatre’s Facebook reads. “This week we share the wise words of a woman who helped see our country through a different crisis.”

“Connections with a purpose,” is what Cynthia Swan called Old Greenbelt Theatre’s virtual movie screenings and weekly discussions. “I’m meeting new people and re-meeting neighbors. The conversation is great and people tend to share their personal insights.”

Since Friday, March 13, the Old Greenbelt Theatre (OGT) has been temporarily closed to the public – a few days prior to theaters nationwide following suit – to prevent the spread of the coronavirus.

“We will reopen,” Caitlin McGrath, OGT executive director, said. “It’s just up to the government when.”

But movie lovers bound by the constraints of social distancing should not worry. The OGT is offering a virtual movie-going experience to its patrons on its website, greenbelttheatre.org, as well as Sunday ‘Flick of the Week’ discussions via Zoom.

“We are more than a multiplex,” McGrath said. “Even when we aren’t in the same space, the time we spend speaking to and seeing each other is important.”

Swan said that although she misses sitting in the new theater, “I really appreciate the participation in the discussions. It really helps when you’re isolating.”

According to McGrath, the ‘Flick of the Week’ is by far the most popular virtual event hosted by OGT, its largest number of participants numbering well over 70 people so far.

Along with weekly movie screenings and discussions, the theater is also integrating some first-run films sent directly to people’s favorite streaming services such as Taika Waititi’s Hunt for the Wilderpeople and staff picks like Sweet Land, To Catch a Thief, A League of Their Own and many more.

Partnering with the Greenbelt Library, OGT also resumed its Storytime on Screen virtually on Monday, April 13, according to McGrath.

“We can’t do what we do without the community,” McGrath said. “People really like being able to interact with friends and neighbors, even when they’re social distancing. The thing that makes [purchasing a ticket with] our theater different than buying a subscription to a streaming service is that we offer our audience the chance to connect virtually with others.”

McGrath said that while helping support community engagement, buying a virtual ticket to view movies with OGT also supports the business and staff during this challenging time.

“Along with a number of fixed costs, staff are still getting paid and working from home,” McGrath said. “We are all hard at work to achieve the goal of continuing to pay every single staff member.”

McGrath wanted to call special attention to staff members Leslie McLaughlin and Kelly McLaughlin, as well as Amy Knesel and Brenna Lauer, who were responsible for putting the Eleanor Roosevelt quote on the marquee. “I’m very proud of all of them,” she said. “They deserve so much credit.”

With ample time spent indoors to read, watch movies and reflect on the art that exists around the community, McGrath said that she hopes people, at the end of their day, see this art as something they want to survive following the public health crisis.

“If you value coming to our theater when we’re open, then joining us virtually is a way to continue to support us and keep our theater afloat, even when we’re closed,” McGrath said.

Movie tickets can be purchased and registration for Sunday movie discussions can be found at greenbelttheatre.org. So, sit back, relax, revel in the freedom of not having to sneak a pocketful of snacks or a bag full of fast food into the theater and enjoy the show!

#MuseumFromHome: New Ways to Experience the Past

by Brogan Gerhart

Until further notice, the Greenbelt Museum will be closed to combat the spread of the coronavirus, but Director Megan Searing Young said that the museum plans to reopen once it receives the green light from the city, county and state government.

It’s important that the museum remains closed until it is safe for businesses to open again because, as Searing Young explained, the Greenbelt Museum is a “micro-museum.”

“One of our challenges is how small the site is,” Searing Young said. However, learning about Greenbelt’s history does not have to stop just because the museum’s doors are closed.

“We’re not just a house,” Searing Young said. “We think of the museum as more of a concept.”

Since the Greenbelt Museum has been closed to the public, she has been taking to the museum’s social media pages, encouraging the use of the hashtag #MuseumFromHome on its Facebook (@greenbeltmuseum), Instagram (@greenbeltmuseum) and Twitter (@GreenbeltMuseum) accounts.

The #MuseumFromHome effort includes daily posts by the museum highlighting interesting facts about Greenbelt’s history. Some of the most recent posts include histories and facts about Eleanor Roosevelt, FDR’s first fireside chat, and vintage glassware, according to the museum’s Instagram page.

Searing Young explained that #MuseumFromHome is a way to keep the community connected to its past and to have something interesting to keep them engaged during the day-to-day.

Regarding upcoming events that were to be hosted by the museum with other partners, “we will be as flexible as possible when it comes to rescheduling,” Searing Young said. “That’s one of the advantages of being a small museum. We have a fair amount of freedom to rearrange things.”

Although its events will be postponed until the museum reopens, the Greenbelt Museum will continue to educate the community through its #MuseumFromHome posts and blog, which can be found at greenbeltmuseum.org.

In light of the public health crisis, Searing Young said that while the museum is here to preserve Greenbelt’s history as a city, “Greenbelt’s greatest resource is its people.” And her main concern now is about the health and well-being of Greenbelt’s older citizens and the personal histories that come with them.

One way that Searing Young recommends residents pass time while cooped up indoors with family is to share memories, oral histories and photographs with one another. An app called StoryCorps (storycorps.org/participate/storycorps-app/) can be used to record oral histories and archive these recordings at the Library of Congress, according to StoryCorps’ website.

From touring a #MuseumFromHome to sharing priceless memories with loved ones, there’s bound to be more than one thing we can learn both about Greenbelt and about each other during these truly historic times.

Neighbors Make Joyful Noise Thanking All Service Workers

A group of neighbors on 2 Court Southway is gathering every night at 7 p.m. for five minutes of hand-clapping or pot and pan banging (or other noise-makers) to offer a big, and continuing, thank you to all essential personnel in our city and the world for all they do to keep us as safe as possible. The neighbors stand in their own yards but can see and hear each other.

Reading about this being done in other cities inspired one resident, Robin Hawley Gorsline, to propose it to his neighbors. Learn more about how this is being done around the nation at #clapbecausewecare.
