Thirty-two Years Later, Palau Retires, Looks to Her Future

by Melissa Sites

If Beverly Palau were writing this story, it would have a hundred photos showing the subject moving around the city. An accompanying video would interview someone, like this reporter, explaining how the subject's work communicating the life of the city helped encourage more people to have a life in the city. And the press release would highlight what is to come as well as what is past.

Palau, the City of Greenbelt public information and communications coordinator, has retired after 32 years. No more will she post pictures on the city's webpage or Facebook pages. No longer will she be the go-to person for questions about what part of the city does what. Soon there will be a new person in those roles, but Palau is moving on.

Palau grew up in College Park in the Calvert Hills neighborhood, surrounded by cousins. "We were not raised as typical Hispanic women," she said, recalling how her father encouraged her love of sports.

Palau's father was head of Spanish/Portuguese at the Library of Congress. Palau recalled, "My father and aunt and uncle all grew up in Cuba. When my father was 10, they moved to Puerto Rico. My mom lived in Ponce.

My mother's father was a doctor, [whose] office building was taken over and is now a museum." As a filmmaker, Palau dreams of visiting Ponce to film the famous square where her parents spent time, to add it to the interviews she filmed of her parents before her father died in 2017.

Palau's aunt, Graciela Palau de Nemes, moved to College Park to work with the University of Maryland foreign language program, where she met Juan Ramon Jimenez, a Spanish poet who became her mentor. As a translator and critic of Jimenez's work, Dr. Nemes nominated him for the Nobel Prize, which he won. A building on campus is named after Jimenez, thanks again to Palau's aunt.

Palau studied radio, television and film at the University of Maryland. The degree, Palau said, was "equivalent to

Creative Kids Camp Opens Both In-person and Virtual

Creative Kids Camp campers Emilia Loo and Leonora Gaschick appreciate the shade afforded by the trees on the Community Center front lawn.

"Unlimited positive energy" is how Creative Kids Camp starts off the summer every year. That is the camp's motto, according to Performing Arts Coordinator Chris Cherry. The camp joins six others being run by Greenbelt Recreation this year. "There's a real theme of community in the camp," said Cherry, who is back with the program for his 23rd summer. "It's a place where the kids really feel accepted for who they are and where they can explore their creativity," he added.

The camp is in the second week of its first session. A total of four sessions will run for two weeks at a time each at the Community Center. The camp runs inperson Monday through Friday for two hours in the morning, and then moves online in the afternoon from the campers' own homes. Campers get to participate in visual arts, drama,

Local Birders Again Take Part In Continent-wide Bird Survey

by Deanna Dawson

It was inching toward 4 a.m. on Sunday, June 13, and this reporter and Elaine Nakash were scrambling to get on the road. The two News Review staffers were heading to Carroll County, Maryland, to conduct a Breeding Bird Survey route and needed to be at the route's starting point, ready to go, by 30 minutes before sunrise. They knew the routine, having done another route in Carroll County the previous Sunday morning.

The routes are part of the North American Breeding Bird Survey (BBS), which tracks the status and trends of North American bird populations. The BBS was developed and launched in 1966 by the late Chandler Robbins, a noted ornithologist and Dawson's longtime colleague at the Patuxent Wildlife Research Center, where the program is

Greenbelt's North End Began As Military Housing in WWII

Brand new defense housing in 1941

Stephen Oetken, a longtime resident of Greenbelt, is a docent with the Greenbelt Museum, a member of the board of the Friends of the Greenbelt Museum and holds a master's degree in historic preservation. After living in the North End of Greenbelt Homes Inc. (GHI) area of Greenbelt, Oetken became interested in the history of the neighborhood, telling the News Review, "I would walk around the area and become fascinated with what I would see, prompting me to begin my research."

Oetken, who conducts walking tours of the North End and is a North End expert, stated, "We have two different neighborhoods with two different types of housing," in an online lecture presented by the Greenbelt Museum on June 17. Oetken has done extensive research using multiple online resources as well as the News Review archives to unearth the history surrounding this area and its early beginnings.

Oetken began by reviewing the early history of the original See HISTORY, page 8

Letters to the Editor

Salutes Scout Stewards

I was happy to see the front-page story on Raina Dirksen's Eagle Scout project to build and set up bee hotels and birdhouses throughout Greenbelt. My own Eagle project was to put a bluebird house system in a local botanical garden near my hometown, so it's great to see the tradition being carried on. This is also an important lesson on how we can support the next generation in becoming the stewards of our land and public spaces. By trusting them to be the leaders in community development projects throughout the city, we ensure that Greenbelt will have a true connection with its residents in the coming years.

A Cat Story?

For four weeks now I have read, under City Notes, cryptic accounts of 60 to 103 cats being impounded from a single residence.

As one with a long-term interest in cats and cat care (you may remember Ms. DeLuca Cat who was popular around Town Center because of being a pettable shoulder rider and a leash walker), I am wondering:

1. Are all of these reports involving the same human and feline occupants of one residence?
2. What were the agenda(s) of the human(s)?
3. What were the agendas of the cats?
4. Were all of these cats alive when impounded?
5. Did it appear that, at the time impounded, the cats had had reasonably good care?
6. Was it apparent that these cats would have fared better/worse were they to have been taken to the Prince George's County Animal Shelter?
7. Where are these cats now? Surely there would not have been space for them at the Greenbelt Animal Shelter.

I think that a story could be written up sketchily without excessive invasion of privacy, and in such a manner that all persons interested in cats, feeding feral cats, living with cats and hating cats could benefit.

Editorial Is Insightful

Thank you so very much for the very insightful editorial in the June 24 issue of the News Review.

As the editorial noted, this year's budget process was inefficient and many councilmembers did not work well to see that the budget was passed by the deadline of June 10.

Thank you once again for demonstrating how a free press can preserve and protect our first amendment rights to freedom of religion, speech and the press, rights of assembly and petition.

Climate Emergency

Hats off, again, to our wonderful mayor for his climate emergency resolution. It's been clear to me for some time that there is a climate emergency, the heavy rains in the spring being just one example. For my part I double mask as often as possible to reduce my own CO2 emissions. Let's work together to end this emergency and the scourge of CO2.

Trudy Croyeur

Postal Procrastination Yet another:

May's Capital-M, announcing community events in which I might want to participate during that month, arrived on June 24. Normally, the Cap-M arrives around a week before the end of the previous month.

David Shapiro

When is Enough, Enough?

There is an answer: NOW! Spring brought a serious problem to our attention: the disappearance of birds and their young. The winged visitors that have populated my yard since I moved here 30+ years ago, that filled the place with birdsong, are practically nonexistent. This reminds me of the book Silent Spring (1962) that alerted us with its message, warning of a chemical apocalypse that endangered bald eagle existence. It triggered the establishment of the Environmental Protection Agency in 1970.

There is also a noticeable decline in other wildlife wanderers ... rabbits and raccoons, opossums, frogs and toads, beneficial pollinators (insects, bees, bats and butterflies) that originally attracted me to move here. A wildlife researcher would say their disappearance warrants further investigation – beyond more chemical controls that wildlife doesn't have time to develop stronger immunity toward. I agree.

Let the weeds grow (especially milkweed for the monarch butterflies) to do what they do best: nourish the wild ones with seeds and insects, nectar, berries and more.

Kudos for New Deal Negotiating Team

In our article published in the June 24 issue on the historic collaboration between the New Deal Café and Greenbelt Consumer Cooperative (Co-op), we inadvertently failed to acknowledge the hard work of the Café's negotiating team. Former Café board member Aileen Kroll, who led the team, former Café Audit Committee member Carla Monardes and current board member Dorian Winterfeld worked tirelessly in negotiating the final contract elements with Dan Gillotte, general manager of the Co-op. Each brought a unique perspective to the negotiating team. Winterfeld, as treasurer of the Café, made sure we were on firm financial footing and Monardes provided first-hand experience and an intimate knowledge of our members' desires as one of the Café's most experienced bartenders. Kroll, as our legal advisor, played a critical role in helping the board clearly articulate its thoughts and ideas about the contract and what it should include, and spent countless hours shaping the final contract elements so that both the Café and the Co-op would have a clear understanding of our individual roles and responsibilities, and thus lay the foundation for a smooth and successful relationship going forward. On behalf of the New Deal Café Board, Audit Committee, Music Coordinator and all of our members we want to thank the Café's negotiating team for their excellent work.

A Bit More Peace

In a world where many of us often attempt to do more, do it better and do it more quickly, the Mishkan Torah Sisterhood has quietly offered summer guided meditation classes to Greenbelters for the past six years. Although the synagogue itself is a wonderful peaceful setting that is welcoming to all, meditation this year will be offered via Zoom and anyone can attend from the comfort of one's own home.

Class sizes have ranged from eight to 19 people, from teenagers to senior citizens. All attendees have expressed a desire to quiet their bodies, minds and spirits and to deepen inner stillness while improving their ability to reconnect with themselves. Class participants have described feeling more peaceful, serene, relaxed and mindful, both during and between classes. Many individuals have experienced a greater ease falling asleep and more patience during challenging times.

A difference has been made in many people's lives when utilizing meditation practices that teach one to slow down, become quiet, go within and experience a bit more peace. Summer classes started Monday, June 21 and will continue from 3:45 to 4:45 p.m. every other Monday through September 13. For more information email Katrina Boverman at Katrinaboverman@yahoo.com or call her at 301-641-1035.

At the Library

All library branches will be closed Sunday and Monday, July 4 and 5, to celebrate the Independence Day holiday.

The library is now open to the public, with hours Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Wednesdays from noon to 8 p.m.; and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Sidewalk service for held books is available outside the upper-level entrance. Study rooms are open but meeting rooms remain closed.

These Books Made Me

The library has launched the podcast: These Books Made Me, exploring the literary heroines who shaped the podcasters. In the debut episode, they discuss Harriet the Spy by Louise Fitzhugh. This year's program runs through Friday, August 20 and will be primarily offered online with select in-person events.

Richard St. Barbe Baker was one of the foremost environmentalists of the twentieth century. In 1952, he proposed planting a "Green Front" of trees 4,000 miles long and 30 miles wide along the southern reaches of the Sahara to begin to reclaim the desert, a movement now underway called The Great Green Wall. We will hear Paul Hanley speak about, "Man of the Trees: Richard St. Barbe Baker, the First Global Conservationist." Friday July 2 – 7:55PM – Zoom ID: 876 9398 7954, passcode: 941340

Drummers are encouraged to bring their own drum but some drums will also be provided. The drum circles will be held at an indoor/outdoor space that has shelter and plenty of open air for safe air circulation. Address will be provided upon registration. CRAB Holds Forums On July 8 and 18

The Community Relations Advisory Board (CRAB) is hosting two online forums, moderated by Dr. Kris Marsh of the University of Maryland. The intent is to share perspectives on policing in Greenbelt in view of the Fair and Just Policing Act introduced by Mayor Colin Byrd last summer and changes mandated by the Maryland State Legislature. CRAB is not seeking a point-by-point presentation, but rather is collecting general sentiments concerning the need for change as well as comments for maintaining things as they are.

The times are Thursday, July 8 from 7 to 8:30 p.m. and Sunday, July 18 from 10 to 11:30 a.m. All are invited to join by Zoom connection by contacting Assistant City Manager Tim George at TGeorge@greenbeltmd.gov. Individuals and groups may submit written statements to George at the same email address. There will also be a directed questionnaire available, in lieu of attending or speaking at the public meeting, at the city's website, greenbeltmd.gov.

All are invited to comment in the manner most suitable to them. Anyone wishing to participate who needs special assistance to do so is asked to call the city clerk during business hours at 301-474-8000 at least 72 hours before each meeting. CRAB will review the comments received and produce a report to council on its recommendations later this year.

Firefly Sanctuary – An Appreciation

For an amazing experience, walk along the Stream Valley Park at night to Greenbelt's new Firefly Sanctuary. After dark it looks like the trees are covered in thousands of twinkling Christmas lights. The effect is truly magical. A huge thank you to our neighbor Mary Ann Canter and city staff for creating a sanctuary for these beautiful and important pollinators. It's incredible the difference it has made to simply not mow the edges of the field.

How do we overcome the American tradition of violence? On this July 4th, let us consider the legacy of romanticizing war. What might freedom feel like if our country adopted "War is Not the Answer", as our national motto? Isn't freedom a human right?

*My Point of ViewA Thank You to Greenbelt

by Aaron Marcavitch

The time has come. After being a part of our family for the last decade, we have packed up the first home we ever owned and are on the way to Suffield, Connecticut. Many of you reached out to us when I announced my departure from Anacostia Trails Heritage Area, Inc. in September. Since then we have made a crazy, pandemic-fueled transition as kids finished school and activities. It was a blessing for the support that Greenbelt had naturally built in.

Our family wishes to extend a thank you to all of those that have been part of our lives. Our friends who welcomed us in: the Ossis, the Wesley-Hunts, the Ehrenreichs, the Chaudhuris, the Heberts, the Waters, the Knesel/Goddards, the McGraths, the Watkins/Fleishers, the Kennells and so many more that we can't list them all. To our scouting friends: Cub Scout Pack 202 and their great leaders, scouts and families, and Girl Scout Troop 27's (part of Service Unit 23-5) amazing scouts and families. To our baseball friends with Greenbelt Youth Little League for the tension and excitement. To Greenbelt Recreation's camps, pool, dance classes, music classes, art programs and sports. To Greenbelt Elementary School for supporting both kids: Dr. Gaines, Ms. Mayes, Ms. Arceido, Ms. Hudson, Ms. Wallace and to all the staff and faculty. To Greenbelt youth musical, to Greenbelt Nursery School, to Greenbelt Labor Day Festival, to Old Greenbelt Theatre, to those that came out for Bea's ACE award, to those that supported Aaron's try for council, to those that cheered on Graham's games. To Greenbelt Homes, Inc. – particularly Eldon Ralph and the board over the years of service and ownership – a unique community and unique leadership, with an amazing historical legacy. To the city council and administration – but particularly the Museum and Friends. And to the best neighbors ever in 13 Court Ridge Road. They welcomed us in and supported us as extended grandparents, aunts, uncles and friends.

Thank you to Greenbelt. We do leave with heavy hearts – but excitement for the next big steps for career and family. Don't be surprised to possibly see us when munching your funnel cake at Labor Day. Or maybe we will see you pull into the Nathan Hale Homestead in Connecticut. Either way, stay in touch, Greenbelt. You will be in our hearts.

Council and Staff Discuss City Economic Recovery Strategies

by Matthew Arbach

At a June 16 council work-session, Economic Development Coordinator Charise Liggins discussed the current state of the city's business community. She also shared the contents of her memo outlining strategies on how the community can best move forward out of the financial hardships resulting from the pandemic. According to the memo, "The state of emergency has transitioned from one of crisis management and response to recovery and resiliency."

Regarding business emergency response, Liggins recommends increased outreach to businesses on Covid-19 restriction; emergency relief programs; county, state and federal resources; technical assistance on emergency relief applications; and implementation of the Greenbelt Business Improvement and Recovery Fund grant program.

In order to promote business recovery resiliency and long-term sustainability, Liggins proposes a micro grant program to provide working capital for small businesses; attracting businesses to start or relocate in Greenbelt; a technical assistance grant program to match costs associated with business growth or expansion; and creating a startup fund for new entrepreneurs.

On expanding the business base, the memo outlines: determine viability of Greenbelt food truck program; an entrepreneur bootcamp or training program; a sharing of best practices among businesses; identify opportunities to partner with county, state and federal nonprofit business services providers; and, a framework for prospecting and proactively engaging new businesses.

Liggins' memo also lays out approaches to create a more engaged and inclusive business community such as a survey to better understand business needs across all sectors; raise awareness of Greenbelt-based minority/women-owned/disabled/veteran-owned businesses; and, the establishing of a Greenbelt business alliance.

Finally, the memo states ideas on developing strategic market initiatives, building an inclusive workforce development strategy, and identifying the most relevant reporting metrics to help measure success of economic development efforts.

In considering the situation past the pandemic, Liggins recommends: efforts toward creating a Main Street designation; a strategic planning process for economic development; a study on possible uses of the Greenbelt Armory; aligning with commercial properties to explore options for underutilized space in the city; and support of transit-oriented development at the Greenbelt Metro Station.

Council was very receptive to the strategies in the memo and praised Liggins for developing a concise and comprehensive plan.

The memo also included a breakdown of each of the city's business sectors. The top three sectors were professional/scientific/tech at 198, healthcare and social assistance at 161 and retail at 88.

The current office vacancy rate is 15.1 percent (down from 17 percent in March) and the retail vacancy rate is 7.8 percent (up from 3 percent). Liggins said that it is unclear how to account for these numbers – they may be data catching up.

Without a formal tracking system beyond basic outreach to businesses, getting the most up-to-date information from property owners (who are often reticent to share business information) and office buildings (where business location changes are frequent) is a challenge. Liggins hoped to make strides in that area.

Liggins and council were keen on creating a greater sense of trust with the business community, with Assistant City Manager Timothy George advocating for a grassroots-up approach that would lead businesses to be more forthcoming in sharing latest information.

Liggins shared that there were no business closures during the pandemic emergency.

Liggins and members of the business community are beginning to create a series of virtual webinars on various topics, such as customer service and assorted best practices, that can be accessed on the city's YouTube channel.

Liggins and council felt it was important to focus as well on the city's workforce and how they have been impacted by the pandemic.

Regarding food trucks, Councilmember Leta Mach was concerned that they may compete with existing restaurants, with Councilmember Emmett Jordan and resident Michael Hartman seeing them as beneficial as they draw people to the city and to city businesses. Hartman saw food trucks as an opportunity for entrepreneurs to get started in the food service industry.

Concerning the soon-to-end moratorium on evictions, council and staff were troubled as they have received little to no response from property owners on how they will deal with this as well as how they will work with their tenants on a repayment plan. The threat of foreclosures was also part of the discussion.

Council focused on getting all possible information to residents on financial and legal services through a variety of avenues like newsletters, email blasts, social media, the city website and the Greenbelt News Review.

Councilmember Judith Davis said that while "we can't help all, there are quite a few we can help."

headquartered. There are over 4,000 routes scattered across the continental U.S. and Canada, about 2,500 of which are run each year. (BBS routes also have been established in northern Mexico, but few of these have been run regularly.) Each route consists of 50 stops spaced at half-mile intervals along a 24.5-mile driving route along secondary roads (mostly). At each stop, an observer identifies and counts all birds seen or heard within a timed three-minute period.

Conducting a Route

Each route is run once each year during the height of the bird breeding season: June for most of the U.S. and Canada. Dawson aims to run her two BBS routes on Sundays, when traffic is lighter. Both routes start north of Westminster, one heading southward, the other heading to the east (route starting points and directions of travel were randomly selected when the BBS was designed). Although geographic coordinates are available for stop locations, Nakash, the driver, finds it much faster to use the car's odometer and visual descriptions – directly opposite a very small shed, just beyond mailbox 4710, at end of guard rail, etc. – to ensure that the stops are made in the same spots each year. Having run these routes since 1985 (yikes!), Dawson recognizes most stops almost immediately but there always are some changes from year to year – most often new houses.

At each stop, Dawson, the observer, starts a timer and calls out the birds as she hears or sees them, with Nakash tallying and recording the counts on pre-printed data sheets. Dawson detects most birds by ear, identifying them by their songs or calls, but must keep alert for silent birds – for example, the belted kingfisher or green heron that fly over, or the eastern bluebirds quietly perched on a fence. Three minutes can go by quickly if there is a lot of bird activity – or slowly if there are lots of cars, which Nakash counts and records. Once the timer alarm sounds, Dawson and Nakash jump back into the car and drive on to the next stop. After 30 or so stops, their energy begins to wane, but they must keep up the pace to finish the route within the recommended five hours. Over the course of the route, about 60 bird species will have been detected and counted. While Dawson and Nakash both enjoy being out in the early morning to observe birds, BBS routes are physically and mentally taxing to conduct, and the exhausted Greenbelters are glad to arrive safely home.

What Happens Next

Dawson still needs to enter the count data from her routes into the online BBS database, and the program data analyst will produce new population trend estimates later this year. The BBS is the primary source of long-term, large-scale population data for more than 400 of North America's breeding bird species (see www.mbr-pwrc.usgs.gov), and BBS results are used by federal and state wildlife agencies and non-governmental organizations to identify bird species of concern and to formulate habitat conservation priorities.

Looming Eviction Crisis: Additional Information

by Ed Fallon

Este artículo está disponible en español en nuestra página web www.greenbeltnewsreview.com.

Upon reading the extensive article on evictions in the June 17 Greenbelt News Review, two leading local housing experts have urged that affected Greenbelt tenants be given further information. The analysis below has been provided by Community Legal Services (CLS) Staff Attorney Kayla Williams, Esq. and by Mary Hunter, director of housing counseling, and Paola Villatoro, both at the Housing Initiative Partnership, Inc.

As urged in the June 17 article, for those who receive an eviction notice, it's crucial to seek CLS legal assistance. Williams urges Greenbelt tenants to contact CLS by phone at 240-391-6370 or 240-691-6532 (Williams' extension) or by email at info@clspgc.org. It will be helpful to also complete the online intake form at the CLS website (clspgc.org).

If a tenant doesn't show up at court, the landlord will likely win by default judgment even if there are major factual errors in their case. If the tenant hasn't contacted CLS before going to the Hyattsville court, they should ask the bailiff in the Landlord-Tenant court to bring them to the CLS office (both are on the third floor). If no CLS lawyer is available to assist, request that the judge allow a "continuance" and reschedule the hearing.

Governor Larry Hogan announced on June 15 that his Executive Order on Evictions and Foreclosure will remain in place through August 15. Tenants with new hearings can assert the Hogan-based defense through that date and tenants who already asserted the Hogan defense in court are protected through then.

But many tenants have already asserted the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) moratorium defense in court because its documentation requirements are less burdensome than Hogan's defense. CDC Director Dr. Rochelle Walensky has signed an extension to the eviction moratorium preventing the eviction of tenants who are unable to make rental payments. The moratorium that was scheduled to expire on June 30 is now extended through July 31. It is intended to be the final extension of the moratorium. Tenants who already had a Failure to Pay Rent (CDC-based) court hearing and got a (CDC-based) reserved judgment will not be protected under Governor Hogan's moratorium.

A wealth of up-to-date information was presented at a Forum on Renters' Resources and Rights hosted by Prince George's County Councilmember Tom Dernoga on June 22 and is available online at facebook.com/TomDernogaD1/videos/1686648771533866. When asked if a municipality can establish a moratorium or take other measures to protect tenants, even temporarily, if there is no federal or state moratorium, Williams answered affirmatively that she believed a municipality can indeed take such action, though they might be challenged in court.

It is a real concern that Hogan's extension won't protect many tenants. And many tenants may not understand the distinction between the CDC and the Hogan defenses. Several pro-tenant groups (e.g., the National Low Income Housing Coalition, NLIHC.org) are lobbying the Biden administration to extend the protection against evictions, possibly under a different strategy than the CDC moratorium.

To learn more or to join with Greenbelt renters and other residents to discuss ideas and plan strategies to support the community's vulnerable tenants, send an email to edfallon@gmail.com. To share concerns at Greenbelt's likely impending eviction moratorium, reach out to the city's elected leaders at Council@greenbeltmd.gov.

Arts Center Renovations Enhance Space for Actors

by Melissa Signorini

Greenbelt Arts Center has unveiled new dressing rooms through a grant from the Greenbelt Community Foundation. The renovations include new carpets and a fresh paint job as well as five new changing rooms for the privacy of actors. The changing rooms are a major upgrade to the facility, as in the past actors who wanted more privacy to change in and out of costumes for shows would need to use the public restrooms. This meant the possibility of running into members of the audience. Furthermore, in shows with minors, chaperones had to escort them back and forth from the restrooms for costume changes. Vice President of Programs Pamela Northrup says the new design "will make that a simpler process as well as allowing for privacy for those who prefer it."

Ample amounts of storage have been added to the space for professional and personal use. Additionally, eight makeup stations have been constructed with mirrors, lights and charging strips. Costume racks and shelves have been placed for extra costume and accessory storage. "We definitely feel that this new space will allow for easier prep for actors for shows," said Northrup.

communications” but included journalism classes as well as hands-on video and radio editing. Palau recalled, “We spliced reel-to-reel tape. In one exercise you had to splice every other word!” This education gave her a deep understanding of how to edit onto videotape, which was hard to explain to others who lacked similar experience.

Many Palaus have attended the University of Maryland since Palau’s aunt led the way. Palau’s son Jason Koebler, who studied journalism, is now editor-in-chief of Motherboard for VICE Media. Her son Jordan is an engineer with Clark Engineering. Daughter Taylor is still at UM in business administration.

Palau’s career began in the Motion Picture/Broadcasting Department at the Library of Congress, where she spent three years. She mixed the sound for live chamber music concerts, and worked to convert radio shows, recorded on large acetate disks, into more stable archival formats. She also worked five years in cataloguing before coming to work in Greenbelt in 1989.

“I was hired to produce the government access channel,” Palau said. “What I really wanted to do was make TV shows. I was just still trying to break into radio, television and film. I started right after Labor Day. My first job was to edit all that videotape from the Festival. It was a challenge to edit with two jury-rigged video controllers that were not very precise.”

One highlight of Palau’s career was the 2013 Partners in Preservation social media contest, which won $75,000 for the renovation of the Old Greenbelt Theatre lobby, while Celia Craze was the director of planning for the City of Greenbelt. “I got obnoxious on Facebook, and the Greenbelters went for it, and we came in third. I’m really competitive because of my sports background,” Palau laughed. Because of her job’s flexible hours, Palau was able to coach soccer, T-ball, softball, baseball and rugby for her children’s teams.

Palau created an award-winning game show with four different rounds, so that elementary school students from Greenbelt, Springhill Lake, Magnolia and St. Hugh’s could learn more about municipal government. Palau also went out to the schools to videotape the students giving their book reports and ran a video camp that produced commercials, talk shows or news shows based on campers’ own ideas. “Some of the interns I’ve worked with, they’ve gone on to work in real production jobs,” Palau said with pride.

She was responsible for overseeing the cable franchise agreements for the city. The original cable provider, Storer, promised an institutional network that would tie all city buildings together, which they did not accomplish. Because of that contract, later providers were obligated to build the communications network that links the entire city. Palau called this “a huge accomplishment that brought us more into the present times, and now our communications costs are so much less than if we had to build it ourselves.”

Palau plans to continue to work with technology and social media, perhaps to help out small municipalities that don’t have much of a web presence. She said, “Over the years the methods of communicating with people have become so diverse.” Under Palau’s leadership, the City of Greenbelt now reaches citizens through Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, Pinterest, Instagram and NextDoor. “New technology always excites me. I love software and new things. I just love to stay up to date and learn new programs. I’ll figure out how to do things because it’s a challenge,” Palau enthused.

planned community. The Resettlement Administration, a New Deal government agency created in 1935, was headed by Rexford Tugwell, who dreamed of building entirely new communities on the outskirts of metropolitan areas encircled by belts of green space. Utilizing this vision, based upon the garden city concept, Greenbelt was carefully designed, planned and built. The design included the unusual feature in which the homes’ service side activities such as trash collection, mail delivery and drying of laundry faced parking areas, garages and the street while the garden side or main entrance faced the interior area. This arrangement provided easy access to the interior shared green spaces with interior walking paths that meander through the courts and under roads, connecting homes to parks, playgrounds and the town center. These homes were to be built primarily of brick or cinder block and carefully sited to capture the sunlight and view of the landscapes.

World War II brought a critical shortage of housing for military personnel and civilian defense related workers. According to Oetken, “The federal government decided to build 1,000 new homes in Greenbelt with construction beginning in 1941.” Oetken explained to the News Review that when the government purchased the land for the planned community, it bought around 12,000 acres, reaching to Branchville near College Park and Good Luck Road. This left a large parcel of open land surrounding the planned garden community with infrastructure in place, making it a prime location for the building of military housing. The first houses were built near Southway and Ridge Road, “with the first occupant, Edward Fowler, moving in during December 1941,” said Oetken. The bulk of the houses for military and defense personnel were built in the North End, which is bounded by Northway, Research Road, Laurel Hill Road and Plateau Place. The houses were finished and occupied by January 1943. Oetken reported that the units each cost around $3,000 to purchase.

Although the government’s aim was to maintain the original look and design of the planned garden homes, they ended up being quite different. While the original design of row houses on courts or cul-de-sacs was maintained, the houses were built quickly and were considered low budget, functional, simple homes originally thought to be temporary. “Most likely they were built as permanent structures

Greenbelter Co-Designs Fallen Journalists' Memorial

by Peter May

Five people at Annapolis Capital Gazette were murdered three years ago on June 28. Journalism has been years under attack by the former senior-most leader of the world's democracies. Capitalism has bought the bones of the local newspaper with a business model of squeeze the profit out for the shareholders.

Politicians should fear the newspapers and the keeping of rigorous, journalistic truth and integrity in a proper democracy, not the other way around. Local journalism will die if it is not supported. Local journalism is key to, and a bulwark for, democracy.

So were the themes at Monday's memorial unveiling for the Guardians of the First Amendment memorial in downtown Annapolis. On a baking row of chairs in the 90-degree heat of Compromise Street at noon, the truth was told like the breath of fresh air that was inexplicably blowing in from the northeast across the Severn River and Chesapeake Bay.

Carl Snowdon, chair of the Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Committee, worked with committee members' and fallen family members' bold idea to memorialize the fallen loved ones, friends, colleagues, journalist brothers and sisters ... the Guardians of the First Amendment. A white woman asked why the MLK Committee would be driving the effort when "none of those murdered were black?" Dr. King, Jr.'s remarks are a poignant rejoinder and almost premeditatedly engraved on the memorial plaque as a small and subtle reminder below the numerous project organizers, supporters and donors... so as not to upstage the massive stone engraving of the words of the First Amendment central to the memorial? Dr. King's words are:

"Somewhere I read of the freedom of assembly, Somewhere I read of the freedom of speech, Somewhere I read of the freedom of press..."

- Martin Luther King, Jr. April 3, 1968

This week memorialized a moment long in the making and sadly seen before internationally. My amazing wife, new Greenbelter Kelly Fleming, co-designed the memorial and managed the installation, so I saw the significance of the project's stress and importance of the project symbolically beyond Annapolis. Today, fallen family, colleagues, friends, fellow journalists, writers and politicians, including David Simon of the University of Maryland Diamondback newspaper, Baltimore Sunpapers and HBO movie, The Wire; Laura Lippman, also formerly a journalist of the Sun and former colleague of the Diamondback; Sun and Capitol Gazette Sports reporter John McNamara, found a common voice. Support local journalism and the mantra and journalistic credo of speaking truth to power was their cry. Our democracy depends upon it.

to be sold off so the government could recoup some of the cost to build them," Oetken explained during the presentation. These houses were built of wood frame on masonry, the trash closets were built into the building and the overhang over the door was supported by tubular supports. They consisted of two-story homes as well as one-story flats intended for single people.

At one point, the area was nicknamed the Mud Belt because of the absence of landscaping. With no grass and shrubbery, the yards were muddy messes. The garden sides were not excavated and landscaped, leading outside to unusable spaces. There were no interior walkways and underpasses connecting the area to the rest of Greenbelt and no playgrounds or parks. The service side led out to concrete and parking lots. The main roads did not have sidewalks, a hazardous condition for children playing or walking to school and for adults walking to the town center for shopping. The homes were managed by two different agencies: the Federal Works Agency managed the defense homes, while the original community was managed by the Farm Security Agency.

During his June 17 presentation, Oetken discussed school overcrowding at the Center School due to the large number of children in Greenbelt with the addition of the defense homes. At one point, first and second grade North End children attended school at 53 Court Ridge Road, where some living spaces had been converted into classrooms. Eventually, a new school was built called the North End Elementary School, located on the site where Greenbelt Elementary is now located. Oetken reported, "Originally the government had planned to build a commercial district in the North End, which never materialized." At the time, most women did not have cars available to them and had to walk to the Co-op to get their groceries. "A small North End store was set up in 3 Court Laurel Hill Road, using units E, F, G and H, functioning mostly as a convenience store, which offered some relief for the residents of this area," Oetken told the News Review. "The North End, because of its physical separation and defined area, developed into a distinctive neighborhood, but due to the cooperative nature of the planned community and the shared experience of World War II, the residents came together by way of Victory Gardens, bake sales and food drives to overcome this separation," said Oetken. Eventually both areas, the planned garden community and the military housing sections, were sold together in 1952 to the Greenbelt Veterans Housing Cooperative (renamed GHI at a later time) and the town of Greenbelt was formed. Oetken told the News Review that these changes "forced Greenbelt to become a real town by responding to its residents' needs and making improvements over time, to where this area is fully connected and flourishing."

Today, the North End, part of GHI, includes well-preserved homes, some with beautiful and interesting additions. There are interior sidewalks, underpasses, playgrounds and picnic areas sprinkled throughout. Gardens and yards are well tended with beautiful plantings and foliage.

Beginning in July, Oetken will host walking tours of this area sponsored by the Greenbelt Museum. He can accommodate groups of up to 10 people and the tour lasts approximately 90 minutes to two hours. For more information on the June 17 lecture or to book a walking tour, go to greenbeltmuseum.org/exhibitsevents.

Barracudas Dive into Meets

by Johanna Moore

The Greenbelt Municipal Swim Team is back in action after being off for the first summer since 1957 due to the pandemic. Leading the team are Head Coach Cora Jackson and Assistant Coaches Alexander Swisdak, Alexandra Nickel, Dinah Cohen and Dora-Marie Groelsema. Something interesting about the coaches is that they are all also active members of the team. Although practices started in early June, the competitive meets kicked off Saturday, June 26, with the first meet versus the Russet Sharks from Laurel. The meet was neck and neck from beginning to end with Greenbelt coming out on top with a final score of Greenbelt, 284 and Russet, 271.

Of specific significance was Mia Moore breaking the 32-year-old 10-and-under 25-meter breaststroke Prince Mont Swim League record set by Lauren Briscoe in 1989. The record was 17.99 and Moore's time was 17.83. This was also a Greenbelt team record and Russet pool record.

Greenbelt has gained new swimmers this season with the merging of Severn Crossing Swim Team. The merger with Severn Crossing has been great for the team since swimmers are able to split their practices between two pools with morning and afternoon practices. Additionally, the team has gained many talented swimmers, making it overall more competitive.

The Greenbelt Municipal Swim Team is a member of the Prince Mont Swim League and has upcoming meets on Saturday, July 10 at Prince George's Swimming Pool in Mt. Rainier and Saturday, July 17 at Smallwood Village in Waldorf. There will also be Divisionals at Prince George's Pool on Saturday, July 24 and an All Star Meet on Saturday, July 31. For more information, visit the team website at greenbeltswimteam.com.

The joy on the kids' faces made it clear how glad they were to participate in an event that they hadn't been able to in so long. There was lots of cheering each other on and the meet ended with a nail-biting girls 200-meter freestyle relay. Swimmers were heard commenting on how much time they dropped and how good it was to be back together with their friends. Parents couldn't believe how much the kids had grown since the team last competed in the summer of 2019. Everyone could agree that it was great to be back.

Greenbelt Artists Featured In Virtual Open Studio Tours

by Letty Wilson Bonnell

Part 1 of 2

While making art during the pandemic isolation has been difficult, Greenbelt artists have used that time to experiment and to find new creative directions, as evidenced in the recent Open Studio Tour sponsored by the Greenbelt Recreation ARTS Program. The following excerpts reflect moments from the studio tours; to link to the full videos, Instagram livestreams, artist websites and online exhibition of works by these artists, visit greenbeltmd.gov/government/departments-con-t/recreation-parks/greenbelt-virtual-open-studio-tour. It is evident that through close examination of the natural world, introspection, experimentation and finding new uses for old materials, our Greenbelt artists have creatively weathered the Covid-19 pandemic.

Rachel Ann Cross

According to Cross, "Home is where the heart is for sure, but it's also been where the office is, where nature is, where communicating through a screen has been and also dreaming of what life will be like when we are able to see each other again and able to travel" She goes on to explain in her studio tour that the works in her new series are like dreams, combining subconscious thought mixed with real life experiences – the dream/Home. Each mini-mosaic story comes together in a meditative process as she fits together her repurposed found materials. "It's like you're creating the puzzle and solving the puzzle." (Cross is a Greenbelt artist in residence and instructor.)

Barbara Joann Combs

For Combs, what helped her to focus is cleaning and organizing, so as she began to do this in her studio this past year, she realized that she had many prepared canvases from cancelled painting workshops, as well as a lot of scrap acrylic paint. She decided to use these materials to explore applying the paint using different tools: a large comb, a palette knife and old plastic loyalty or gift cards. In her Elements series, she scrapes and combs paint into discs of color, layered with splatters, into vibrant, textured abstract compositions. "My inspiration for the pieces I have [created] - was Covid!" (Combs is a community artist and educator.)

Racquel Keller

Keller began her recent Landscapes of Memory series during the pandemic as a way to revisit in her mind places she had been and really think about the essence of each place. She often works in acrylics, but found that for these paintings, she liked using watercolor, which can be much more ethereal and ephemeral than acrylic, "similar to the way a memory becomes the farther you get away from it." She depicts scenes she has actually observed, always from memory and never using photographs, because "it's like getting to travel again." (Keller is a Greenbelt artist in residence and instructor.)

Amanda Demos Larsen

Familiar to many Greenbelters as the Recreation Department's arts education specialist, Larsen

Roosevelt Center by Carrie Hannigan, 2021

is also an accomplished figurative painter, concentrating on large portraits and self-portraits in oil. She describes her style as like "staged dramatic scenes," where some small, often mundane, moment of everyday life is captured. This past year, though, when it has been hard to make art, she has concentrated on working on a smaller scale, observing that "I get better when I am working on a small scale, no strings attached, experimentally." For her current project, she has made beautifully detailed preliminary sketches of cicadas, to be transformed into a series of silkscreens portraying this otherworldly creature. (Larsen is Greenbelt Recreation arts education specialist and instructor.)

Monica Lathan-Dye

Lathan-Dye presents her recent Blooming Beauty Abstract Collection in her open studio tour, which includes vibrantly colored graphic images of different flowers she has encountered on her neighborhood walks during the pandemic. "I like to think of each creation as a portrait of a flower." She describes "Gerbera Orange" for instance, as "nature's firework, popping with shades of orange, blue and violet." (Lathan-Dye is a community artist.)

Carrie Hannigan

When recently asked to "put something" in the display case just outside the Community Center office, Hannigan filled the space with a paper-cut diorama of Greenbelt's Roosevelt Center – complete with falling acrylic rain drops and trees filled with imagined pink cherry blossoms. As an artist, Hannigan works in a variety of media, but paper art is a particular favorite. "The trees... were my favorite part because it was just so therapeutic to sit... and just cut out all of the beautiful lacey shapes." She has just finished a new diorama in the same display case – which, hopefully, can be seen in person soon! (Hannigan is a Greenbelt Recreation administrative assistant.)

Daria Parsa

Parsa is yet another artist who works for the Greenbelt Recreation Arts Program. She uses mainly oil paint or charcoal, inspired by her connection to the natural world. Forced into quarantine by the pandemic, Parsa began taking many walks, discovering patterns and objects in nature that inspired her series of abstract paintings. "From rotting wood and twisting branches to clay beaches and rocks, these abstractions focus on small details that often go overlooked, highlighting the complexity and intrigue of nature." (Parsa is a Greenbelt Recreation arts program assistant.)

music, dance and even circus activities. There is also an online option for families who wish to participate in camp entirely from the comfort of their residences.

Cherry said the camp has been carefully planning the re-opening of Creative Kids Camp all year, mentioning that campers are split into four groups that do not interact with other groups for the duration of camp. He added that many of the staff members were campers first and have come up through the program. Camp manager Izzy Springer says, "I have been with the camp since I was a small child and came back as an intern when I was 15." Now 22, she says she has worked at the camp every summer since. "It's just such a great community of people and I've met some of my closest friends through this," she added.

For more information on Creative Kids Camp and other Greenbelt day camps, call 301-397-2208 or 301-397-2200. Registration forms for camp sessions can be found under Summer Camps 2021 on the city website, greenbeltmd.gov.
