Exploring, Learning, Creating: OGT's New Education Space

by Letty Wilson Bonnell

A highlight of the Old Greenbelt Theatre's grand opening on Saturday, May 14 was touring the Screening Room and Media Arts Literacy Lab at 125 Centerway, the new center for the Beyond the Screen initiative. As stated on the OGT website, this new space will allow the Friends of Greenbelt Theatre (FOGT) to "take its mission to be the center for film culture and education in Prince George's County to new heights." See more about the initiative at greenbelttheatre.org/beyond-the-screen.

The screening room first opened as a pop-up on July 3, 2019. After the theater closed at the beginning of the pandemic in March 2020, a successful fundraising campaign set in motion the transformation of the former storefront. An interior door now connects the Art Deco theater lobby to the new space, allowing for easy passage from one venue to the other. The wooden honey-toned wall of the screening room, with curved bench seating, welcomes attendees into this adjoining room. Dark green fabric on the old-style movie seats in the screening room, blue-green tile in the bathroom and on the wall of the concession stand, and a mosaic of green triangles on the workshop tables suggests a contemporary revision of the original theater's 1938 style.

The first workshop in the media lab, Making New Sounds for Silent Movies, took place on April 23, led by Washington, D.C., composer Andrew Simpson. Focusing on kids from 9 to 12 years of age, Simpson guided his students in using instruments and found objects to create a score for a short silent film clip.

Greenbelt Road Proposal Cuts Lanes, Speed to Be Safer for All

by Amy Hansen

Greenbelt Road should be reduced by one lane in each direction, have a reduced speed (25 mph) and have better pedestrian crosswalks.

Those are three of the recommendations Kittelson & Associates, Inc. have put in their nearly 200-page Greenbelt Road Corridor Plan Draft, which is available on the City of Greenbelt website at greenbeltmd.gov. Comments are being accepted through Tuesday, May 31.

The goals of this project, according to the draft, are to provide equitable and safe movement of people along Greenbelt Road; to provide key connections to residential communities, businesses, neighborhoods and parks; to support livability and economic development by improving access; and to create a more human-scale environment along the corridor.

Project staff included members of Kittelson & Associates, as well as Foursquare Integrated Transportation Planning, plus Holly Simmons, Terri Hruby and Molly Porter from the City of Greenbelt Department of Planning and Community Development and Janie Nham from the Metropolitan Washington Council of Governments.

Within the planning-level analysis, Kittelson demonstrated the feasibility of reducing the number of through lanes on Greenbelt Road using Greenbelt peak-hour traffic volumes, according to Community Planner Simmons.

Kittelson reported that daily traffic volumes along Greenbelt Road peaked in 2006 and never fully recovered after the 2008 economic recession. More recently, daily traffic volumes have decreased due to the Covid-19 pandemic. Lasting effects of the pandemic on traffic volumes are unknown, Simmons said.

This project comes after several earlier studies, including the Greenbelt senior mobility and accessibility barriers study, as well as the Community Walk led by State Delegate Alonzo Washington in September 2021.

Council Holds Public Hearing On Upcoming 2023 Budget

by Matthew Arbach

The Greenbelt City Council meeting on Monday, May 9 was focused on the public hearing for the upcoming budget (the first of two), but included residents sharing views on the recent shooting (May 2) and eviction relief. Representatives of the Greenbelt Police Department, Public Works, as well as the Greenbelt Assistance in Living Program (GAIL) and Senior Citizen Advisory Board were present to receive proclamations from Mayor Emmett Jordan, to commemorate Police Week, Public Works Week and Older Americans Month. These representatives gave a brief summary of their current activities.

Citizen Concerns

At the onset, resident Bob Rand expressed his desire for some sort of public review of the May 2 incident. As the city does not have a civilian police review board (which is a possibility for the future), Rand suggested that the Public Safety Advisory Committee (PSAC) be given this charge. While stating that the use of 10 shots to disable the resident seemed excessive, he acknowledged that he was not present at the time and thus could not make an accurate and objective assessment. He pressed for a much greater mental health perspective and presence on future calls such as this one, believing that there are better tools, tactics and de-escalation strategies in these situations than guns. He looked forward to the release of body camera footage on May 11.

Resident Gionni Smith pressed for the city to consider a further round of eviction relief, citing the difficulties being experienced by his mother at Franklin Park, who is now facing eviction despite his best efforts to assist her. He related that outreach to the Department of Social Services, the county and Greenbelt CARES has proved fruitless so far.

Jordan responded that the city has already invested $1.5 million from the American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) reserves for eviction and mortgage relief, and plans to do more. He advised further direct contact with CARES. He stated that council is well aware

Letters to the Editor

A Special Community

We agree with many others that our Greenbelt is a very special community.

And the Washington Post echoed that thought recently.

We hear so often of police shootings, including one recently in our community. But unlike so many others, our assailant is in the hospital and can receive medical and mental health treatment.

Our congratulations to the two officers and our tribute to Chief Bowers for his leadership.

Greenbelters Struggle While Council Stalls

The city received $23 million from the American Rescue Plan Act that was signed nearly 14 months ago by President Biden. However, one would not blame the residents of Greenbelt if they forgot that the city had received this windfall from the taxpayers because council still hasn't used that money to help the residents. Instead, council continues to withhold that money from us. Meanwhile, food costs are up almost 12 percent from April 2020 to April 2022, and gasoline costs are up over 139 percent from the second week of May 2020 to the second week of May 2022, according to the Federal Reserve. Sending grocery cards and gasoline cards to town residents would have cost a mere fraction of the $23 million that the city received and would have been a huge relief to struggling residents. Indeed, the Census Bureau estimates that 15.2 percent of Greenbelt residents were living in poverty (at least as of 2020). If council isn't going to use those funds to help Greenbelt families deal with this current surge of price inflation, then what is council going to use the funds for?

In the meantime, I have counted at least 10 photo ops of Mayor Emmett Jordan handing out proclamations and multiple ribbon-cutting ceremonies in the past two months. Now, I'm not some idealist who thinks that elected officials should only engage in substance, not performance. Politics has, and always will be, partially performative. However, performance must be earned. In other words, our elected officials have to do their job (which is, first and foremost, writing and passing legislation) in order to earn the privilege of enjoying performance (such as photo ops for proclamations and ribbon-cutting ceremonies). Let's demand council do its job and help Greenbelt families!

Alexander Zajac

Downton Abbey: A New Era

From award-winning creator Julian Fellowes comes the much-anticipated cinematic return of the beloved cast as they go on a grand journey to the south of France to uncover the mystery of the Dowager Countess' newly inherited villa. The family and staff also observe and participate in the making of a film at Downton Abbey. Rated PG, running time 125 minutes

Happening

(In French with English subtitles)

A tough but rewarding watch, this is the story of Anne, a young woman who decides to end her pregnancy to finish her studies and escape the social constraints of a working-class family. France in 1963: a society that censures women's desires. And sex in general. This simple but cruel story follows the itinerary of a woman who decides to go against the law. Anne has only a little time before she must act. Her exams are just around the corner, and her baby bump is growing fast. A loose adaptation of Annie Ernaux's novel, reflecting her own experience with abortion when it was still illegal in France in the 1960s, the film won the Golden Lion at the 78th Venice International Film Festival and received universal acclaim from critics. Rated R, running time 100 minutes

Stephen Giffin Hunt

Stephen Giffin Hunt, Sr.

Stephen (Steve) Giffin Hunt died peacefully on May 6, 2022, at Southern Maryland Hospital. He was born in Columbus, Ohio, on June 7, 1955, to Howard and Virginia (Giffin) Hunt. His family moved to Greenbelt when he was two months old, and he grew up in a GHI home on Crescent Road with his father, mother and two brothers. Stephen was an altar boy in his younger days at Mowatt United Methodist Church, where his mother was the church secretary. He was briefly involved in scouting.

Steve spent many summers of his childhood at his grandparents' farm in Van Wert, Ohio. He attended elementary and middle school in Greenbelt and graduated from Parkdale High School in the class of 1973. He attended the University of Maryland, earning his bachelors' degree in sociology. For over 40 years, he worked in building supply as a warehouseman, forklift driver, customer service rep, night manager and in other positions. He lived in Greenbelt his entire life.

Steve had many hobbies and interests. He was an ardent Trekkie who watched every movie and TV series episode of Star Trek. An avid Doc Savage reader, he also enjoyed Dr. Who, as well as many other sci-fi books and movies. He was a true hardcore Washington Commanders football fan and would not allow any disruptions during the games.

Steve listened to many styles of music, from classical to rock, and played the guitar. He loved camping, hiking, bicycling, photography, traveling, astrology and jewelry making. He liked socializing with his neighbors, and spending time with his family. A loving and giving husband and father, he always remembered birthdays, anniversaries and other special occasions, and made time to go on vacations with his family, relishing the countryside as well as the shore. He took his son to every scout meeting and camping trip, which was a joy for both of them and volunteered at the Boy Scout booth at the Labor Day festivals.

Steve was preceded in death by his mother, father and his older brother Howard "Skeeter" George Hunt. He is survived by his wife Melinda; son Stephen, Jr.; brother Christopher Hunt; many brothers and sisters-in-law, including Rene Hunt, Mark and Maureen Francis, Phil and Marilyn Simmers, Philip Ball and Randel Ball; as well as many nieces and nephews.

In lieu of flowers, the family suggests donations to the American Heart Association or the American Cancer Society.

Painters, uke players and guests are invited to picnic on the lawn. In the event of rain, music and art activities will move indoors. (But no indoor dining, please!)

depict the rhythms of humanity moving through interesting social and architectural spaces, while maintaining an "ambiguity" of place. "The inexactness," Davies comments, "suggests that if we step back and take in the whole, we can more easily see beyond differences of language, skin color or traditions." Her work emphasizes the big picture – community. The reception will include a screening of select time-lapse videos that the artist produced, documenting the creation of her paintings. At other times, the videos will be available to view online. The exhibition will be open daily through August 19.

Guests can also enjoy free mini tours of the Greenbelt Museum from 1 to 5 p.m., in celebration of Greenbelt Day Weekend. Travel back in time to the 1930s and learn about everyday life in the early days of this planned, cooperative community. Taylor and Lehman Receive David Craig Scholarships

by Doug Mangum

The David Craig Memorial Scholarship Fund (DCMSF) has announced this year's winners from the Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) Class of 2022. The fund, which honors service, academics, faith, athletics and personal leadership, made two selections this year: one full $12,000 award and an additional partial $3,000 award.

Outstanding financial giving and support from private donors and contributors has permitted the DCMSF to increase its payouts and giving the past two years. The fund, now in its 35th year, began with a $1,000 award in 1987. Its mission of providing financial educational assistance was established in response to the tragic death of David R. S. Craig in February 1984.

Full Scholarship

Selected for the full scholarship award of $12,000 is Kimberly Taylor. As class president, she has a long list of school and community involvement. Her father was in the Class of 1979 with myself and David. Taylor plans to attend the University of Michigan in the fall. The family, a tight knit group, already has plans to visit for parents' weekend in Ann Arbor and take in a football game against the University of Maryland.

Taylor was a member of the ERHS tennis team for three years. She won the Unsung Hero Award playing doubles as a freshman, helping secure the team's undefeated season within Prince George's County. As a class president and vice president, she focused on inclusiveness within the student body. Her public service included being director of operations for a nonprofit chapter of Lifting Lives, whose focus is combating educational inequalities. She also organized food drives for families affected by Covid-19, and led in an initiative to gather and distribute feminine hygiene and basic medical products for a women's shelter.

Church is a vital part of Taylor's life. Among her multitude of activities was the National Fine Arts competitions that helped channel her talents and gifts toward spreading the gospel, writing sermons stressing the importance of speaking kindly of others. She was involved with skits that advocate for smart, God-centered decision-making for teenagers; volunteering for children's church as a preacher, teacher and performer engaging younger children; and is nationally ranked as a preacher, musical theatrist, creative writer and dramatist.

An area Taylor worked intensely in was bridging the gap between comp students and science and tech students, as shown in this quote from her application:

"When I entered my presidency in 11th grade, the class council had one non-science and tech or honors student. Therefore, I expanded the council and reserved a third of the new seats for non-science and technology Greenbelt students, empowering the Greenbelt students to have a stronger voice in student government. An unexpected element to this was a blossoming of new friendships. Inclusivity became a product of conversations and shared insights previously not known."

Taylor is a politically minded, faith-based, positive spirited, critical thinking, fun and engaging young person. The DCMSF is proud to add her name to a long list of awardees.

The second selectee, who will receive a one-time $3,000 award, is Caroline Lehman, who also has parental lineage to ERHS and the Greenbelt community. Her mother Mary (class of 1983) and grandmother Irene Hensel were pillars of both the Greenbelt and the St. Hugh's Catholic Church communities.

Partial Scholarship

Lehman, an English and Spanish translator and a politically active force, is co-editor of the Raider Review, the school's newspaper, where she started working her sophomore year. She is an Honor Society and Spanish Honor Society member. She also serves as president of several organizations within the school. As a mentor and tutor, she serves her fellow students in a plethora of areas.

A dance and drama enthusiast at Stars Studio since the age of 4, she was elevated to instructor working with the 6- to 9-year-old class. She is also a member of the Travelers Players Ensemble, a Shakespearean troupe, during the summer.

Interested in local politics, Lehman has volunteered with several campaigns at the local, state and national levels. She has also served at vaccine locations as a translator, delivered meals to seniors and interned at the Latino Diversity Leadership Council.

Lehman pursues her Catholic faith with vigor and intentionality, with a professed passion for public service; her record shows enormous participation and community impact in causes ranging from the environment to the impoverished and marginalized. She states that "Justice and equity, are very important" to her. One letter of recommendation speaks volumes to the person she is: "Caroline has never waited for an invitation to make positive change but has instead joined the ranks of civil servants herself. She is a case study of how one can transform the hours of a day into productive work for change." Lehman will be attending Fordham University in the fall.

The DCMSF congratulates both Taylor and Lehman and the entire Class of 2022 for their perseverance and drive and persistence in dealing with all the challenges that the Class of 2022 has endured and triumphed through in their years attending ERHS during the pandemic.

Fund directors also extend thanks to the entire applicant pool for 2022.

of the financial predicament that city residents continue to experience from the pandemic, and that Greenbelt does vastly more for its residents than similar municipalities of its size.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts was adamant that there should be no reason for evictions to be occurring given the significant amount of ARPA funds still unused.

Police Week

Police Chief Richard Bowers reported that this year's addition to the National Police Memorial in Washington, D.C., is one of the largest, greatly driven by deaths from Covid. In addition to the events in D.C., Police Week has seen many local events sponsored by organizations like the Prince George's County Command Officers and Municipal Chiefs' Associations. Many newly sworn-in Greenbelt police officers were present at the meeting as well.

Acting Director of Public Works Brian Townsend was pleased by the recent plantings and bioretention area installed at Buddy Attick Park.

Older Americans Month

Older Americans Month has seen a large array of events and programs. The centenarian program, led by Therapeutic Recreation Supervisor Rebekah Sutfin, has now had two celebrations with another coming soon. The Senior Citizens Advisory Board, led by Betty Timer, is now at full capacity for the first time in five years. On Saturday, June 4, the board is having an online forum to showcase positive adaptations to the pandemic. The group Age My Way has as its goal the assisting of seniors to age in their homes.

Christal Batey, community resource advocate from Greenbelt CARES and GAIL, revealed a long list of future events. Planned Community Center events included a produce distribution on May 19 and an Open Air Resource Fair on May 24. A Health Screening was held at Green Ridge House on May 20, where visitors could have their blood pressure, cholesterol, blood glucose and A1C assessed.

Budget Hearing

The public hearing began with an email from Molly Lester. Among other points not discussed at the moment, Lester expressed that the livable wage for lower pay grade, single adult city employees, based on a recent assessment by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology study, is $22.96/hour. She also encouraged raising the fine for ongoing municipal infractions from $500 to $1,500 as a stronger deterrent in situations like chronic trash accumulation.

In response to a question from resident Bill Orleans, Councilmember Judith Davis said that all groups or entities receiving city funds must and do produce documented receipts and requests and that all transactions are closely followed up.

Resident Joyce Campbell stated the need to curtail any rise in city taxes, citing the upswings in inflation and cost-of-living. Speaking as a senior, she related the challenges many experience from living on a fixed income. Rather than hire a full-time diversity/inclusivity position, she suggested a wiser and more frugal strategy was to simply provide related training to city staff.

Resident Bob Rudd echoed her sentiments, saying that the city's property owners, homeowners and small business owners "are facing a terrible burden" through their financing of many city efforts. He called for a revenue neutral budget, and agreed that new hirings would be unwise in the current "bad economic times." He called for council to "make the tough calls and balance the budget" without a raise in the tax rate.

Acting City Manager Timothy George praised the success of the recent job fair where 50 participants met with the 17 employers present. He extolled Greenbelt for the "huge community response" that "exceeded expectations" on possible uses for the ARPA funds.

University of Maryland student Sydney Jones made a short video of the one-day workshop, which was on view in the Screening Room during the grand opening event.

During the grand opening tour, Director of Operations Stephenie Arcido answered questions about future educational opportunities in the Screening Room and media lab, which will include camps for kids, workshops for all ages, lectures and classes for adults. Let's Make a Movie workshops for kids and I Heart Home Movies film-to-digital conversion workshops for adults are just two examples of coming activities. The lobby area and storefront will also include interactive exhibits and displays in collaboration with the Greenbelt Museum. FOGT plan to show additional information about the history of sessions, Greenbelt Road was called an "unfriendly, dangerous and ugly" road. One commenter explained, "[We need to] decide whether this is infrastructure for cars to pass through or a place for people."

The draft plan addressed specifics, including how to make the corridor the right size for the demand.

"The consultant team recommends removing one through lane in each direction of Greenbelt Road ...," Kittelson wrote. "The removal of one through lane in each direction should be done in conjunction with analyzing the corridor intersections using current traffic volumes and include a review of corridor-wide signal timing."

The draft also addressed specifics on making the corridor a place people want to walk and bike, and improving the transit experience. In addition, the team addressed how Greenbelt Road could better connect residential communities, businesses, neighborhoods, parks and trails.

Electric Bike Trip Offers Greenbelt Pair New Perspective on Portugal's Algarve

by Cathie Meetre

Rick and Cathie Meetre chanced an early-season cycle trip to Portugal in mid-March. Their early-season timing reflected the fact that Portugal's Algarve region is a major summer tourist enclave that runs across the southern coast of the country. Much patronized by English and German sun-seekers on cheap flights from cooler and damper climes, these resorts are a madhouse of bikinis and suntan lotion in summer – where zero rain, plentiful sunshine and high temperatures illuminate sundrenched beaches and surfable waves but make things tough for cyclists.

Out of Season

Mid-March, not so much. With acres of empty apartments and hotel rooms, lodging is cheap and beaches are the haunt of gulls and the occasional wet-suited surfer. Temperatures stay in the 50s and 60s and the skies are often cloudy or gray (and this year, sometimes ochre-yellow from Saharan sand storms) – though little rain fell during their 'rainy season' to the disappointment of a region under drought. For the cyclist, this meant perfect cycling weather and low traffic volumes on roads built for heavier summer traffic – if, that is, they cycle on the roads.

Loulé, reached by train from Lisbon, was where the Meetres rented electric bikes and started out. An earlier trip planned for 2019 and canceled because of the pandemic had been designed around regular bikes and was necessarily conservative due to their limited cycling prowess. Since then, the pair, with encouragement from electric bike converts Steve and Lola Skolnik and Richard and Carol Roth of Greenbelt, had redesigned the trip for electric bikes – extending daily mileages and incorporating more of the mountainous regions inland that were otherwise too much for older legs. Despite the electric assist, the Meetres were still conservative in their planning. Which, it turned out, was probably a good thing.

Crazy Eights

The route was a rough figure eight, about 450 km (~300 miles) long, as shown in the map. The e-bikes tackled most of it with ease, including one day with a total climb of about 500 meters (~1,650 feet). The climb statistic accumulates all the ups – the start was at sea level and the end at about 440 meters (~1,450 feet) but with lots of hills and valleys on the way. In the steepest four-mile section, the Meetres accumulated approximately 800 feet uphill. Some pedaling.

Roads Less Travelled

The statistic, however, doesn't take into account the road surface. It was practically impossible to determine in advance what the surface would be like, though their suspicions that all but the bigger roads might be dirt was correct. An 'M' (M for Municipal) class road near the coast would be asphalt, but in the hills it was dirt. Not dirt like civilized Northway down to the ballfields, but a mix of gravel, sand and blasted-out and slippery rock, with gouges carved into muddy ground, potholes, fords and steep drop-offs on the side. Scary enough to ride up – and even scarier to ride down with some 25 percent grades (one foot uphill for each four forward). Even with the e-bikes on full power, in the lowest gear and pedaling like a banshee, some were only just doable and woe betide he who lost momentum half way up. There were no second chances.

The trip would have been physically impossible for the Meetres on their heavy pannier-loaded bikes without the boost from the Bosch battery and motor.

The roads got worse the further from the beaches, and the country they went through was practically uninhabited. A fall or injury would leave the victim far from any help with no cell phone signal and a landscape dotted with ruined and abandoned farmsteads. The Meetres sometimes cycled for hours without seeing an inhabited house, a person or a vehicle – just peace and beauty.

In fact, Portugal is 're-wilding' the area just north of their route – reintroducing species that lived here centuries before many humans did. An Iberian lynx breeding sanctuary lay nearby their route and that endangered population is now beginning to thrive again (but not, so far, with cyclists as prey).

The Meetres experienced two weeks of surprises, friendliness, spectacular scenery, interesting stays and a continuing saga of nature in one of Europe's least populated areas, despite the influx of half Europe along its beaches.

Read the next installment to find out how they fared in their excursion into the wild.

Starting and ending in Loulé, the ride loops from beaches to hills to the very tip of Portugal. The actual routes diverge significantly from the direct lines, avoiding major roads and visiting reservoirs, villages and beaches along the way.

Residents See & Hear Birds On Walk at Greenbelt Lake

by Kevin Carpenter-Driscoll

Before the summer-like heat settled around Buddy Attick Park on Saturday, May 21, a group of residents partook in the 8 a.m. Birding 101 event with the Department of Public Works. Environmental Coordinator Kevin Carpenter-Driscoll and Horticulture Supervisor Lori Thiele introduced participants to birding basics and led a guided walk around Greenbelt Lake.

To set the tone, a pair of Red-shouldered Hawk chicks greeted the group, who identified 23 bird species during their walk. A Yellow-billed Cuckoo put on a show along the peninsula, jumping between tree branches and pursuing insects. Along the southeast portion of the trail, a Hermit Thrush perched low in a tree and showed off its distinctive song with a melodic two-toned trill at the end.

The group kept their eyes trained along the tree line for songbirds as they walked across the dam, when their prize, a Baltimore Oriole, flew overhead and alighted atop a tree while displaying its impressive colors and song. Some participants noted this was the first time they'd seen an oriole in person despite it being the state bird of Maryland.

The event concluded at 10 a.m. and everyone left feeling satisfied with the successful loop around the Lake. Anyone inter-
